FATHER BEGS ALL TO HUNT MISSING GIRL

'FRESNO DAN' WINS WILL CASE

"Fresno Dan" wins and "Dakota Dan" loses in the famous Russell identity contest, according to the findings in a report filed with the clerk of the Middlesex Probate Court in East Cambridge today by Gilbert A. A. Percy, master in the case.

Master Percy finds:

That the claimant (Dakota Dan) is not Daniel Blake Russell, but is James Deller Rusaw.

That the claimant is not Daniel Blake Russell, but on the other hand that the person above mentioned as "Fresno Dan" is Daniel Blake Russell.

That the claimant is not Daniel Blake Russell and has not shown himself to be either in his mental, moral, physical, intellectual or other characteristics.

William R. Scharfen and Edward M. Shanley, attorneys for Dakota Dan, died seventy-five objections to Master Percy's finding today and asked that the master give the evidence pertaining to all their objections.

The three chief objections are to the findings that Dakota Dan is not the son of the late Daniel Russell, that William C. Russell is not mentally deficient and that the testimony of two witnesses for the claimant was subject for attack.

Finds "Dakota Dan" Is Rusaw.

The master finds that "Dakota Dan" is Rusaw, but only on the evidence relating to Rusaw's life, but also on the evidence of personal identification.

Then, outside of any evidence about Rusaw, the master finds that "Dakota Dan" is not Daniel Blake Russell and that "Fresno Dan" is.

The master's report numbers sixty-four typewritten pages. After presenting the question in dispute he says:

"I carefully watched every witness, more especially the two perhaps most interested parties in the case. Of 'Fresno Dan' the report says:

"His statements made in answer to the numerous questions that were put to him in the trial of this case certainly has demonstrated that he is not at all mentally deficient, as the claimant alleges him to be."

The master notes that witnesses on each side were emphatic in their opinions, but he adds:

Thinks Opinions Honestly Formed.

"The opinions thus formed, I have no doubt, were honestly formed in the main, and the expression of the opinion as given in the evidence on the whole no doubt was honestly given. It seems to me, however, that I should call the attention of the court to two witnesses who appeared before me."

Then the master continues thus the

Rules Plant Must Pay Smith $323,750

Court Orders Commission on Sale of Factory to U. S. M. C.

Thomas G. Plant, the millionaire shoe manufacturer, will have to pay Harry W. Smith of Worcester $323,750 as a commission for helping to put through the sale of Plant's Jamaica Plain factory to the United Shoe Machinery Company, under a ruling handed down by the Supreme Judicial Court today.

This decision sustains Smith in every particular, and it was reached only after being fought through a number of the lower courts. The fact that Plant and Colonel William S. Harbour of New York, vice-president of the purchasing company, both claimed that no definite commission had been promised Smith made no difference. His claim for a five per cent. commission of $6,000,000, the original purchase price of the property, was sustained.

Democrat Bets $500 to $1,000 on Gardner

The Boston News Bureau today prints, under the head "The Boston Market," the following:

"A former Democratic alderman of Boston has placed $500 against $1,000 that Gardner is elected."

Telephone inquiries to the News Bureau failed to discover the name of this pessimistic Democrat, but the inquirer was told:

"Yes, the bet's a real money bet—he make believe. Yes, the man honestly thought Gardner would win. Yes, he's an alderman—was five years ago. His name—well, he ranked up high in the alphabet—A, B, C, or D. No, he's still at large."

Albanian 'Patriots' March on Servians

BELGRADE, Nov. 1.—An immediate resumption of fighting is threatened in Northern Albania. Servian outposts received word today that an army of Albanian "patriots" is marching upon Diakova, where there is a strong Servian force.

HUERTA DOUBLES HIS ARMY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—Code messages from Mexico City reveal the fact that Huerta, anticipating American intervention, is preparing to meet it by massing troops at Laredo, Texas, near the United States border.

Huerta is fitting out the second class Mexican gunboat, Democrata, for service. Her ordinary two six and a half-inch muzzle loaders and her quick-firing guns are being supplemented by other and more modern guns.

Word comes from Havana that Huerta has set a price upon the life of Felix Diaz, if Diaz ever ventures back into Mexico.

To Resist Invaders.

Huerta's plan to resist an American force of invaders is believed to have been the principal motive in his decision to practically double the size of his army. The veterans of Huerta's forces, the trained fighting men, are declared to be those held in readiness or already concentrating toward Laredo. That Huerta will back up his defiance of Washington with shot and shell is now regarded here as certain.

Enlistments are going on at a rapid rate in the Huerta strongholds.

It is learned that all the great Powers are looking for American intervention in Mexico.

The Mexican government's inability to pay its employes is pointed out by the London Daily Mail as showing the need of intervention.

Press opinion in Germany and France also emphasizes the Mexican financial crisis as a strong contributory factor for forcible action by the United States.

The German government believes that further forbearance toward Mexico has ceased to be a virtue, according to information received from a government source in Berlin.

Wilson in Conference with Bryan.

With a long conference between President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan today, the development of the new Mexican policy of the administration advanced one more step. The reports of Envoy Lind to Mexico regarding the activities of President Huerta now are assuming greater detail, and President Wilson is basing certain features of his policy upon them. It is reported that Mr. Lind is pessimistic over the prospects of getting an early announcement from General Huerta as to the result of the election. President Wilson is now waiting for his announcement, but it has become obvious that dilatory tactics are being pursued to force the United States into an awkward position.

HEAVY TROOP GUARD AS FOREIGN ENVOYS MEET AT VERA CRUZ

VERA CRUZ, Mex., Nov. 1.—With 2,500 troops massed in the government barracks to prevent any outbreak, diplomatic conferences are now going on that are to have a marked effect on the future of Mexico.

John Lind, special United States envoy, is the chief figure in the pourparlers. The conferences are surrounded with the utmost secrecy. The German and Russian Ministers arrived here late yesterday. That important plans are under way was indicated by the fact that they consulted with General Maas, the military commander, before they notified Mr. Lind of their arrival.

WOMAN IS FOUND IN POND

WORCESTER, Nov. 1.—The body of a woman, thought to be that of Miss Mercy Ritchie, an insane patient who escaped from the State Hospital for the insane on October 21, was found today in the pond behind the hospital.

Since the finding of the body of the Fairbanks woman yesterday afternoon, the police started to drag the pond early today. The body is that of a woman about thirty-three years.

The State Board of Insanity will resume Monday its hearings on the charges against nurses of brutality to insane patients in the hospital. But already testimony has been presented of amazing cruelty to patients on the part of the women attendants.

Tell of Practices.

The hearing has been for the most part confined to the women's department, but male nurses have also testified—testified to forcible feeding, to hot packs, to sheeting and to a dozen filthy and unsanitary practices.

Dr. Scribner, superintendent of the institution, takes the position that the hospital is all it can be made on the present appropriation, and the nurses who have testified have been a unit in condemning the low wages, heavy work and long hours.

The authorities and attendants at the hearing yesterday clashed with reporters and photographers in an attempt to keep secret facts connected with the institution. The State Board and some of the trustees united with Dr. Scribner in forbidding the photographing of whiskey bottles found in the corridors of the institution. The attendants threatened to "smash the head" of one man who picked up some of these bottles and carried them to the hearing room.

Dr. Scribner refused to allow photographs of nurses who had testified, and called a policeman to help him.

The testimony of the hearings thus far has brought out the following facts:

Facts Brought Out.

1—That it was not uncommon to drag women patients across the wooden floors, so that splinters were driven into their bodies.

2—That sheeting is a practice resorted to, to control unruly patients, and it consists in twisting a sheet tightly about a patient's head and drawing her backward.

3—That hot packs are a recognized part of the routine. Patients are packed in towels so hot the nurses' hands are blistered in handling them, and are left so for as long as four hours. One woman was in hot packs sixteen hours out of twenty-four for a week.

4—That the food is poor and badly cooked; that the patients are not allowed to eat their fill or to eat in peace.

5—That the beds are not kept clean; that many are without mattresses.

New Haven Trains in Fitchburg Wreck

Passenger Locomotive Plunges Rear-End Into Freight.

FITCHBURG, Nov. 1.—One man was injured and a score of passengers were shaken up in a rear-end collision between a New Haven Railroad passenger train and a freight one-half mile east of this city. The locomotive of the passenger train plunged into the freight caboose, smashing it into kindlings.

Frank Gerrin of Taunton, brakeman on the passenger train, jumped when he saw that a collision was inevitable. He was seriously, but not fatally injured. It is said that the accident resulted from a failure of the brakes to work.

A reward of $500 is offered to the person who discovers and returns to her home MISS ELIZABETH WALKER who disappeared from her father's house, 13 Cypress Street, Brookline, Mass., early Wednesday morning, October 29th. She wore a dark blue felt hat, a brown pony coat with beaver collar, and a dark mixed grey skirt. Age 29, weight 115, height 5 ft. 6 in., hair dark brown, eyes blue.

HUNDREDS LOOK FOR HEIRESS

A deep-hearted appeal—the pathetic call of a father for help in his hunt for his daughter—came this afternoon from Arthur L. Walker of Brookline, the father of Miss Elizabeth Walker, the young heiress who has been mysteriously missing since last Wednesday.

The appeal was for assistance in the general search being made to find the missing young woman. So keen was the interest in the case that an instantaneous response was forthcoming. Hundreds made preparations this afternoon to take part in the search. In the number were 100 boy scouts and a number of town employes of Brookline.

Mr. Walker turned over to the Brookline police 2,000 circulars containing a description of his daughter and his offer of a $500 reward for the discovery of her whereabouts. The mailing of these circulars today was the beginning of a countrywide search to find Miss Walker. The father says he will leave no stone unturned in his efforts to locate her.

The boy scouts, led by Mr. Walker, started out from the Cypress street home of the Walkers at 5 o'clock this afternoon. Scores of other volunteers followed and several miles of territory were scoured in the home of unearthing some clue to the mystery.

Had Valuable Jewels.

It has become known that when she was last seen Miss Walker wore diamonds and rubies of great value. It is also stated that she had with her considerable money. This fact has led to a theory that robbery may explain the disappearance.

Today's search for Miss Walker is similar to that made for Dorothy Arnold, the New York society girl who disappeared two years ago and who has never been heard from. A similar search was made in Boston seventeen years ago when Millionaire James Stevenson searched in vain for traces of his missing daughter, Grace.

The disappearance of Miss Walker is like that of both Miss Arnold and Miss Stevenson. In each case no motive could be advanced by relatives to explain the mysteries.

It has also come to light that when Miss Walker left home, her pet cat left with her. It is the belief of the family that the cat followed the young woman from the house. So far no report has been made to the Brookline police of the finding of the cat.

Church Aids Search.

A search has been made by members of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of which Miss Walker has been a lifelong member. Members, both of the Sunday School and the church, joined with the boy scouts, the park employes and the police in a general hunt.

Chief of Police Corey of Brookline, a neighbor and warm friend of the Walkers, today declared that he will leave no stone unturned in his efforts to solve the mystery of the young woman's disappearance. The chief has spent most of his time at Brookline police headquarters getting in touch over the long distance telephone with the police of other cities.

Theories in the case have been numerous. Some of the neighbors of the family think Miss Walker is in hiding—perhaps in Brookline, and not far from her home. Others think the young woman, while mentally depressed and feeling herself a burden to her family, left home of her own volition. It is the belief of Mr. Walker that his daughter is suffering from a mental trouble and is being secreted by a person or persons who are awaiting the announcement of a big reward before restoring the young to her parents.

Mr. Walker declared his daughter had been under constant watch for several days before she disappeared. She had been acting strangely, it was explained. Her disappearance did not become known until about 7:30 Wednesday morning, when her mother went to the daughter's room and found it empty. The family at once became alarmed.

Health Was Poor.

Mr. Walker said:

"Elizabeth retired later than usual on Tuesday night. She did not appear depressed or morbid, but was under the spell that seized her early this week. She has never been robust and her frail condition makes it impossible for her to have gone any great distance. I should say that a mile would have taxed her strength. Still it is possible that she got on a car and may have got out of Brookline in that manner."

Mr. Walker declared that there was absolutely no suspicion of a "love affair" in the case. He said his daughter wore a ring set with ravishing diamonds and other rings set with rubies of great value. He said he had personally visited a number of banks and had found his daughter had not drawn out any money.

"She always had money, however," he added, "and I don't know how much she may have had when she left the house."

May Be Held Prisoner.

The father further explained his belief that his daughter's poor health had affected her mind and that possibly she had lost all consciousness of her identity. He declared his conviction that she is still alive.

The police said they have received no suggestion that Jamaica Pond or other waters should be dragged. The police theory was that the young woman was still alive, and probably in hiding—whether by force or of her own volition they said they could not tell.

LOAN SHARKS ARE WARNED BY PELLETIER

District Attorney Pelletier today takes a "sailop" at the loan sharks and calls the attention of the public to the fact that they are not obliged to pay the illegal rates of interest charged. He warns the employes of the loan sharks that they are as liable to prosecution as the "sharks" themselves. Here is his statement:

In view of the fact that the Mason Financial Company was convicted by a jury this week for violation of the so-called small loan act, I believe it to be my duty to call the attention of the public to the fact that in many cases where loans have been made there has been a violation of the law, and it is probably quite true that many borrowers cannot be legally called upon to pay the amount claimed against them.

I would advise all borrowers, therefore, to submit their cases to Mr. E. Gerry Brown, Supervisor of Loan Agencies, at 6 Park street, Boston, in order to have the benefit of his advice.

I want also to call attention to the fact that it may be that employes for persons or concerns doing an illegal loan business may themselves be liable to prosecution under the law together with their employers, and persons so engaged should be careful that the duties of their employment are in accordance with the law, and that they are not violating, in the course of their work, the provisions of the small loan act.

It is a fact without contradiction that there are many cases where interest is being paid from 200 to 500 per cent., and sometimes to unbelievable concerns. Action is not only against good conscience, but also a violation of the law, and the unfortunates who have fallen within the toils of such vultures should learn their rights.

Bird Takes Wallop at the Wallopers

Progressive Candidate Charles Sumner Bird took a wallop at the wallopers in his speech in Dedham and Hyde Park today. He said:

"I have no respect for the kind of professional politics which campaigns on bickerings, claims, hysterical predictions, personalities, vague promises and words. I cannot believe that clownish performances or attacks and counter attacks help any candidate. And let me say that the 'Tammany Trio' support of Mr. Walsh may be more dangerous but no more of a disgrace to Mr. Walsh than the support of the Barnes-Penrose national machine is a disgrace to Mr. Gardner."

MASTER FINDS "DAKOTA DAN" IS J. D. RUSAW

testimony of William H. Kelley of Eastern avenue, Malden, was "absurd and incredible." Kelley was a witness for "Dakota Dan."

The master next attacks the testimony of Mrs. Annie J. Scanlon, a witness for the claimant. Master Pevey says:

"Her truth and veracity were impeached by records of the court which were introduced in evidence. In my opinion her testimony was so apparently devoid of the truth that I feel it my duty to call the attention of the court to the same."

Of "Dakota Dan's" description of the Daniel Russell home in Melrose the master says:

"The methods of approach and the stairways to his room and other parts of the house he described very incorrectly and not at all in accord with the true location of the rooms. His mother's room he placed in the wrong locality in reference to the stairways and entrances and the hallway next adjoining."

"Dakota Dan's" Mental Makeup.

The mental makeup of Dakota Dan, according to the master, is wholly different from the nature which the evidence attributes to the real Daniel Blake Russell. The real Daniel Blake Russell had quiet, unobtrusive ways, diffidence—shyness—lack of sociability—lack of confidence."

Dakota Dan, the master finds, is "noisy and demonstrative—a bold and forward man, not evidencing shyness, but putting himself to the front, delighting in the association and companionship of others —not such companionship, however, as would be expected of a young man brought up in such surroundings as Daniel Blake Russell had in his own home."

Of the claimant's character the report reads in part:

"Upon his own story from the time that he reached New York State, and from that time on during different parts of his career, his associates and companionships, especially in his conduct toward women, have been of the most dissolute and immoral kind."

Again Scores Claimant.

Further scoring the claimant, the master says:

While claiming to keep from the world a secret which he stated he solemnly promised his mother he would never divulge, he not only insinuates, but openly sets forth to many people and proclaims in fact thus to the world, alleged glaring immoralities on the part of his father in connection with certain women who had from time to time been a part of or visitors at the Russell homestead.

Some parties implicated in these charges have appeared before me and testified. Outside of these charges made by the claimant, in regard to the man who he alleges to be his own father, not one breath of suspicion has appeared in the evidence before me which would substantiate the truth of any of these assertions made and charged by the claimant against the late Daniel Russell, or other parties implicated.

The charges against counsel were so serious that I felt it my duty to consider evidence in relation to the same. In respect thereto, I report that no slightest evidence of any improper or unlawful conduct on the part of the counsel of the respondents.

The report ends thus:

Master Gives His Conclusions.

In conclusion I find as follows:

I. Irrespective of all the other evidence in the case, taking into consideration only the evidence which deals with the life of James Delbert Rusaw, and in connection therewith the evidence relating to the "Woodmen of the World," I find that the claimant is not Daniel Blake Russell, but is James Delbert Rusaw.

II. Irrespective of all the other evidence in the case, including evidence relating to the letters, photographs and writings, submitted as relating upon the identification of the claimant, and taking into consideration only such other portions of the evidence which relates to the PERSONAL identification of the claimant as James Delbert Rusaw, I find that the claimant is James Delbert Rusaw.

III. Irrespective of the evidence in the case which had in any way to do with or refer to James Delbert Rusaw, including the evidence before mentioned, relating to the "Woodmen of the World," I find from and upon the remaining testimony alone, that the claimant is not Daniel Blake Russell, but on the other hand that the person above mentioned as "Fresno Dan," is Daniel Blake Russell.

Declares Evidence Conclusive.

IV. Irrespective of all the other evidence in the case, which directly or indirectly had to do with James Delbert Rusaw, including the evidence in relation to the "Woodmen of the World," also without taking into consideration in any way any of the statements alleged to have been made by either the claimant or said "Fresno Dan" since the time of the departure from his home in 1885 of Daniel Blake Russell, including in such statements all statements and evidence in relation to the revolver alleged to have been left at home by said Daniel Blake Russell; irrespective also of the testimony relating to the construction, alterations, interior and exterior arrangements and appointments of the house and barn and confining myself simply and wholly upon the other portion of the evidence as referred to by the numerous witnesses before mentioned which had to do with the question merely of identification of the claimant and "Fresno Dan" respectively, I find upon this portion of the evidence alone that the claimant is not, and that "Fresno Dan" is, Daniel Blake Russell.

V. Upon the whole evidence I find that the claimant is not Daniel Blake Russell, and has not shown himself to be either in his mental, moral, physical, intellectual or other characteristics, which upon the evidence entered into and formed a part of the real Daniel Blake Russell; nor on the other hand I find that the person so-called "Fresno Dan," is Daniel Blake Russell.

French Divorce Suit Follows Geraghty Case

Mrs. Amos Tuck French's suit for divorce is the indirect result, friends of the family today believe, of her daughter's elopement with Jack Geraghty, the Newport chauffeur. It has followed Mrs. French's reconciliation with her daughter, against the will of Mr. French. Mrs. French is also mother of Mrs. Samuel Wagstaff.

Mr. French is a brother of Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, and of Lady Cheylesmore of England, who has just arrived for an American visit. Mr. French is a New York banker, but non-support is one of the charges his wife made against him.

Mrs. French is a social leader at New York, Newport and Tuxedo. The suit has been filed in Rhode Island. Jack Geraghty and his bride are now living in Woburn.

In September when Mrs. French and her mother, Mrs. Stuyvesant Leroy, were injured in an auto accident in Brookline, Mr. French did not visit his wife.

Following the elopement of his daughter, Julia, and her marriage to Jack Geraghty, an automobile demonstrator, in August, 1911, Mr. French became estranged from his family. He opposed a reconciliation. The Geraghty's have, however, been forgiven by Mrs. French and many influential members of the family.

Mr. and Mrs. French will have been married twenty-eight years on December 2 next. For some time the wife has been at Newport.

Besides the children mentioned, the couple have two sons, Amos Tuck French, Jr., and Stuyvesant Leroy French.

The suit will probably be heard this month.

Confusion as Banks Collect Tax

New Income Measure in Force Today and Mix-Up Follows.

These are hard times for rich folks—folks with an income of say $4,000. For the new Federal income tax is being collected today for the first time, and no one seems to know just how it is being collected.

Mr. Moneybags walks up to the wicket, for instance, and lays down a bundle of coupons he has carefully clipped that morning.

"I'll take that in thousand dollar bills," he says carelessly.

"Sorry," says the obliging paying teller. "We can only accept these for collection. Make out that affidavit please."

Mr. Moneybags proceeds to explode with a distinct pop.

The banks are accepting coupons—which are simply notes on the corporation issuing the stock or bond—for collection. Some of these coupons are tax-exempt. Others are not.

The banks accept the coupons and send them to the banks on which they are drawn. There the tax, if the coupons are taxable—is collected.

Minus this collection, the money comes back, and the coupon holder receives credit for the amount.

Hereafter, when the system gets working more smoothly, the banks expect to collect the tax for the government. The banks will collect the one or two or three percent. due, and about the 20th of the month will make reports to the government, paying the tax.

But just now, it is hard to be a coupon clipper.

D'Annunzio Tells of His Suicide Plans

Poet Declares He Will Remove Himself in Two Years.

PARIS, Nov. 1.—Gabriel d'Annunzio, the well-known Italian poet, told Charles Lebargy, the actor, and Edmund Rostand, the playwright, that because he could not endure any life that was not one of most violent and intense emotions, he had carefully prepared for suicide in two years' time.

The form of self-destruction chosen is unique, for no vestige of his body will remain. He says the whole world will long talk of his death as the most remarkable suicide on record. His friends suspect he has some method of destroying himself by chemical means.

PRETTY GIRL CAUSE OF WEST UPTON KILLING

MILFORD, Nov. 1.—It was the word of a woman which first turned suspicion on Daniel J. Cooper, who today confessed to the murder on October 4 of Alfred Grant Bradish.

Cooper was arraigned before Judge Clifford H. Cook and held for the Worcester Grand Jury, which meets the third Monday in January. An autopsy on the body of Bradish was also performed.

Back of the murder lies an amazing story. Both Cooper and Bradish were married. The police today declared that the two had quarrelled over a young girl, and that this quarrel was the fundamental cause of the shooting.

The story of how the police first came to suspect Cooper became known today. The murder took place on a deserted lane in Upton. State Detective Robert Molt said that two days afterward he found a woman, Mrs. Walter Balcom, who had seen Cooper going in that direction. This woman told him she heard three shots. Detective Molt said. She said she supposed someone was hunting till she heard that Bradish had disappeared. Then she connected the three shots with Bradish's disappearance and remembered seeing Cooper go in that direction.

The police immediately began to keep Cooper under surveillance. He was questioned, but at first would admit nothing. He continued to work at the Draper Mills. Finally, after five-hour grilling, he broke down, confessed the murder and led the officers to the swampy spot where he had hidden the body.

Cooper killed Bradish with an automatic revolver, which he had received a permit to carry during the Draper strike. He said he shot Bradish from ambush. The first bullet hit his victim in the head and was fatal, but Cooper fired two more shots into Bradish's body, then dragged it out of sight, and the next day came back and buried it a foot deep in the swamp.

HELD AS WIFE SLAYER; MAKES GOOD DEFENCE

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 1.—Arthur C. Mack, forty-one, of No. 150 Clifford street, who was arrested last evening by Chief Inspector C. S. Horton, charged with killing his wife, Rose Mack, forty, appeared today in the Sixth District Court before Judge Howard B. Gorham and pleaded not guilty. He was held without security for Superior Court, November 13.

Mack came home last night in an intoxicated condition and found another man there. He beat his wife with his fists and drove the unknown man from the house. Mrs. Mack was found by Mrs. Louis Campbell, who lives in the same house on the floor below, kneeling beside her bed, as if in agony. When Mrs. Campbell went up again Mrs. Mack was dead.

Mack, when questioned by Chief-Inspector Horton, acknowledged striking his wife with his fists but would not admit that he kicked her.

"I did not intend to kill her, but it made me mad to see that other man in my home," said Mack.

Mack in court this morning made a good plea for himself, which impressed the court.

He was born in Boston and has lived for the last nine years in this city. He is a woodcarver by occupation and served for two years in the army in the Philippines.

BACKACHE "GETS ON THE NERVES"

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Many who suffer from backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable, fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves," but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and this acid irritates the nerves, keeping you "on edge" and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. Doan's Kidney Pills cure backache by curing the kidneys. Here's proof:

A Bostonian's Testimony.

Mrs. John Cunningham, 207 Bench St., Revere, Boston, Mass., says: "Night and day I had terrible pains in my back. I couldn't sleep, stoop or straighten, and was barely able to get around. My kidneys were old, sluggish and inactive. After various fruitless efforts, six boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills permanently cured me. I now feel fine."

THAW IN NEW BRIEF ATTACKS JEROME

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 1.—The latest brief, now being completed by counsel for Harry K. Thaw, will probably be presented to Governor Felker Monday. It will consist mainly in an attack on W. T. Jerome, special counsel for the State of New York, charging him with bad faith in applying for Thaw's extradition.

It will point out, it became known today, that the extradition application is in itself a proof that the desire to get Thaw back to New York is made in behalf of private parties rather than for the benefit of New York, as under the laws of New York Thaw would in all likelihood be deported to Pennsylvania, his native State.

These private parties, it will be charged, fear that, if Thaw were liberated, their own disreputable conduct, past and present, of which Thaw is well aware, would be shown up."

Many alleged insane persons, the brief will declare, are shown by official statistics to have been deported from Matteawan into the States where they held citizenship, or into those foreign countries of which they were citizens.

The deportations included, it will be claimed, several persons charged with murder in the first degree, who had never been acquitted, but found insane and sent to Matteawan.

The brief will state that no person can legally or properly harbor vindictiveness against a person who is believed to be afflicted with a mental disease; also that there is no legal reason or honest desire which would prompt any State official to seek to cause the return of a State lunatic already outside the State and willing to keep outside.

All the exertions to bring Thaw back to New York, it will show, are based on the pretended cause of a trifling misdemeanor.

That there is no public demand or sentiment to press the punishment of any citizen who would conspire to obtain his own liberty will be pointed out, and that the offence involves no moral turpitude.

No honest man in New York blames Thaw for leaving the asylum for this reason. It will be set forth, while these exertions and tremendous expenditures and extravagance appear to be in the interest of private parties.

Jerome, it will be charged, practically admitted his own bad faith when he stated at Rochester before Governor Dix that Thaw was "neither a murderer or a lunatic."

If Jerome was an honest, law-abiding citizen, Thaw will contend, "murderer" is the last epithet he would apply to Thaw, in view of the fact that Thaw was tried and acquitted of that charge, a straightforward official being bound to respect the verdict of the jury.

Thaw Not Legally Responsible.

No honest official, it will be claimed, would maintain that Thaw is legally responsible, while Jerome's language indicates that Jerome is not after Thaw for a misdemeanor. In public opinion, it will be claimed, Jerome is after Thaw for an ulterior purpose, and that the misdemeanor charged against Thaw is a deliberate subterfuge and malicious attempt to violate the law of requisition, which prohibits any Governor from honoring a requisition when he believes it is put forward in bad faith.

In a fresh statement today Thaw said: "When we went to Rochester I did not know we were going there to hear a discussion on the character of New Hampshire lawyers. It is to be regretted that not only my own counsel but, by logical inference, every lawyer in New Hampshire was publicly indicted by the lawyer representing Jerome.

"This lawyer declared that the idea of attacking the good faith of New York is nonchalant and not tolerated. Then Jerome said: 'Here is a case, the infamy and shame of which can be tested in every place this case came.'

"It is true that the conduct of this case has been shameless and that a lawyer has publicly made false statements, ignored testimony, is guilty of perjury, suppression of evidence and other corruption. Mr. Jerome knows the individual who is guilty of this.

"Jerome tries to shift the blame by accusing me and my counsel of crimes mentioned in his faulty requisition.

"Jerome did make one true statement, namely, that 'one of the attorneys in the case was disbarred and a second is now facing disbarment.'

"This attorney was disbarred for his action in the Bancroft case, not in mine. Jerome neglected to mention the third lawyer for whom disbarment papers are being prepared, primarily for his improper conduct in a will case, but bringing, if rumor is true, certain portions of the same lawyer's conduct in my case.

"Jerome's success in New York tribunals has been gained by distribes, but the same tactics will avail him nothing in New Hampshire.

"The Governor of New Hampshire will have his own opinion as to the conduct of Ex-Governor Stone of Pennsylvania and the New Hampshire attorneys whom this fool-mouthed New York lawyer included in his Gettysburg Attacks.

"If it was an honest case, neither Abe Hummel nor any institution of Abe Hummel would find necessary the three filthy insinuations touching every lawyer in New Hampshire.

"Extreme Presumption."

"An attorney who is known to be friendly with a number of rich gentlemen of evil character in New York, coming to New Hampshire with a requisition made in bad faith and only issued as a subterfuge, shows extreme presumption when he objects to an inquiry into bad faith. This is especially true as the requisition laws permit of such an inquiry.

"Jerome showed his bad faith by being suspicious of others.

"It seems to me that Jerome will receive a rebuke in New Hampshire that will remove the stains of the mud he has thrown on New Hampshire lawyers and ex-Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, who is making his initial appearance in the New Hampshire courts.

"I want to emphatically say that, while in the past I have suffered because certain disreputable lawyers in New York were on my side as well as opposed to me, that at present moment there is no lawyer retained by me anywhere whose hands are not a hundredfold more clean than the hands of W. T. Jerome, and I trust everybody in New York and in New Hampshire knows it."

GRAY HAIR

How Your Hair May Be Darkened and Kept So.

REMARKABLE METHOD FREE DOLLAR BOX

Gray hair is believed by most people to be evidence of weakening in physical and mental power.

Those who have gray hair and must rely upon employers or others are often compelled to fight this prejudice. It is particularly hard for a man with gray hair who is thrown upon his own resources by business failure or financial changes to seek a new position.

Prejudice Against Gray Hair.

The gray-haired person soon realizes that younger-appearing men are chosen for positions, although he may know more than the selected who are really older than he is.

Among women, it doesn't the one too pronounced hair of the natural dark or dark-brown shade (rather than gray, white or bleached) meet with the highest favor?

As a matter of fact, gray hair usually has nothing whatever to do with loss of physical or mental vitality. It is caused by a disorder of the pigmentary glands in the hair follicles, due to such causes as a shock, fever, wearing of hats, lack of, neglect in caring for the hair, etc.

Don't Paint Your Hair.

Most gray-haired persons make the mistake of relying upon what are commonly sold as half stains, dyes, dyeing combs, etc. It would be quite as sensible to use ink or stove polish, for these cheap and nasty dyes deceive nobody except those who use them. The color is unnatural, and everybody readily knows what has been done. The hair has been merely painted. These dyes soon begin to wash off, usually discoloring the skin, clothing, pillows, etc., and ugly streaks of strange shades cover the hair.

Restoration of Color.

At last what we are confident is the best hair darkening method has been evolved, which has its object not merely in restoring the hair to the natural shade of youthful days, but in developing a luxuriant, silky, natural, beautiful growth.

The hair roots and glands are reached scientifically, and the best possible results are attained. The new method is directed at causing the hair to darken gradually, so that the appearance is that of improving health and vigor.

Box and Book Free.

An illustrated, very interesting book will be sent absolutely free. It has information about restoring the hair to natural color, overcoming baldness, lasting removal of dandruff, how to stop hair from falling out, etc.

JUNE AND HER BABY UNDER EATON ROOF

Mrs. Jeanie May Eaton triumphantly bore her eighteen months old granddaughter Eleanor into the Eaton home at Arlington today. When with face beaming joyously the acquitted widow declared:

"This fills the cup of my happiness to overflowing."

It was the first time little Eleanor—June's baby Eleanor—had ever entered the Eaton home. The coming of the wee baby completed the Eaton family circle and meant that Mrs. Eaton, her mother, Mrs. Harrison, her daughters, June and Dorothy, and tiny Eleanor were reunited under a single roof.

N Mrs. Eaton held little Eleanor in her arms all the way over to Arlington from June's home in Quincy. Then June Mrs. Eaton came to Boston yesterday. They spent the night at June's. Today Mrs. Eaton ordered a taxicab and with the baby and June speeded homeward.

Fondle Baby by the Hour.

In Arlington they were met by Mrs. Harrison and Dorothy. Both were anxious, as they had not known Mrs. Eaton intended to spend the night away from home. A petted little Eleanor, especially Mrs. Eaton and Dorothy. They listened to baby's babbling—for little Eleanor can talk—and fondled her by the hour.

Dorothy took little Eleanor over by the fire in the big living room and seemed perfectly contented to do nothing but "hold baby," and sing to her. Mrs. Eaton moved about the house, happy of heart and her face wreathed in smiles. Her daughter was responsible for the change. Little Eleanor would toddle about after her calling babyishly:

"Gran'ma, I wan' 'ou, gran'ma."

While in Boston Mrs. Eaton had a front tooth pulled by her dentist. The tooth had been troubling her for some time.

Tomorrow the family will have a happy Sunday at home. In the morning they plan to attend services at the Arlington church.

Mrs. Eaton and June Keyes, her dentist, came to Boston to do some shopping and to visit a business office in the South End. But at the South Station they were recognized, and curious people followed them all the time they were in Boston.

Annoyed by the Curious.

They took an elevated train to Northampton street, alighted there, saw the throng following them, stepped into a drug store and telephoned to several people, had ice cream sodas, and finally disappeared into a Washington street dentist's office.

Mrs. Eaton was asked to comment on the trial, but answered simply:

"The case is closed," and threatened to call a policeman if pressed further.

After most of the crowd that had watched her go into the dentist's office had left, Mrs. Eaton and June came out, and went to a tailoring establishment a few doors away.

Grief for Ill Wife Drives Man to Death

Roxbury Man Shoots Himself After Daily Hospital Visits.

Walter E. Colby, sixty-one, who shot himself to death at his home, No. 886 Albany street, Roxbury, is believed to have been prompted by grief over the illness of his wife. The body was found by Mrs. Robert Fisher, from whom the flat was rented. Colby had evidently been dead several days.

A note found in his effects read: "I have had to work hard of late. I want to end it all." Mrs. Colby has been at the Massachusetts General Hospital since early in October. Colby visited the hospital daily, but could not see his wife because of the nature of her illness, an affliction of the eyes.

ORDER ARREST IN SAUGUS AUTO WRECK MYSTERY

In the belief that some person was seriously or perhaps fatally injured in the mysterious automobile crash at Saugus last night, Chief O. Thompson today stationed a special policeman beside the wrecked machine with orders to arrest anyone who came to claim it.

Two persons are known to have been injured. They were treated at Lynn Hospital and left early today. Their injuries were slight, while about the wrecked automobile are a quantity of loaded shells, which will be shown. The first of these cases will not be tried before October 1.

The Thaw case will be called when it is ready and not a day sooner. Harry Thaw must take his chances with the other prisoners in the Tombs, who are charged with murder in the first degree.

The situation in the Tombs as to the number of prisoners held there awaiting trial must be blamed if there is any delay, as the judges of the general sessions. The district attorney has an ample force, fully capable of trying three parts of the general sessions working every day all Summer.

Instead of three courts working all day we have, theoretically, two parts working one half day, and, as a matter of fact, we have one part working less than half a court day. This is a great handicap to the district attorney's office during the Summer. There is no need of so many prisoners being held in the Tombs as are confined there now.

This announcement by Jerome was highly displeasing to the defence. It was argued that if the murder cases did not get into the courts before October 1 and, if nineteen must be tried before Thaw's case was, the chances of a trial by November were extremely remote. It was openly predicted that Harry would have to keep on waiting in his cell in "Murderers' Row" until New Year's Day at the earliest.

The weather became hotter and hotter. On some days Harry's mother was absolutely unable to brave the heat and see him in his cell.

Thus Harry's lawyers tried another move. On September 14 Hartridge and his associates in the defence served notice on Jerome that on September 24, they would ask the Supreme Court to transfer the Thaw case from the part of General Sessions to the Supreme court.

The object of this was apparent. It would hurry matters. It would jump the Thaw case right into the Supreme Court, over the heads of the nineteen other cases which were ahead of Harry.

On September 24 Clifford W. Hartridge and John B. Gleason of Thaw's counsel came before Justice Bischoff of the Supreme Court, to argue for a transfer of Harry's case from the General Sessions calendar to the Supreme Court.

It had been reported that Jerome would not oppose the request, but when Hartridge and Gleason arrived in court they found Assistant District Attorney Smythe there to fight any transfer.

Gleason opened by telling the judge that Thaw and Newport are today observing "Suffrage Day" by going through the streets selling suffrage journals. Each time Gleason shook her shoulder in scrlled, "Votes for Women."

Evelyn's Love Story

CHAPTER LX.

"For who would bear ——the law's delay ——" Hamlet's Soliloquy.

Announcement had been made, though not official, that Harry would be brought to trial on October 15. But early in August District Attorney Jerome shattered all hopes of an early trial by saying that he could see no possibility of the courts being ready until November at the earliest.

Under the regular procedure, Harry would be tried in the Court of General Sessions. The defence wished matters accelerated. Harry was restless in the Tombs, the hot weather making life there a physical burden.

But this unimpressionable Jerome said "No."

There are nineteen homicide cases which must be placed upon the calendar before Harry's case. No fair motion will be shown. The first of these cases will not be tried before October 1.

The Thaw case will be called when it is ready and not a day sooner. Harry Thaw must take his chances with the other prisoners in the Tombs, who are charged with murder in the first degree.

The situation in the Tombs as to the number of prisoners held there awaiting trial must be blamed if there is any delay, as the judges of the general sessions. The district attorney has an ample force, fully capable of trying three parts of the general sessions working every day all Summer.

This is a great handicap to the district attorney's office during the Summer. There is no need of so many prisoners being held in the Tombs as are confined there now.

This announcement by Jerome was highly displeasing to the defence. It was argued that if the murder cases did not get into the courts before October 1 and, if nineteen must be tried before Thaw's case was, the chances of a trial by November were extremely remote. It was openly predicted that Harry would have to keep on waiting in his cell in "Murderers' Row" until New Year's Day at the earliest.

The weather became hotter and hotter. On some days Harry's mother was absolutely unable to brave the heat and see him in his cell.

Thus Harry's lawyers tried another move. On September 14 Hartridge and his associates in the defence served notice on Jerome that on September 24, they would ask the Supreme Court to transfer the Thaw case from the part of General Sessions to the Supreme court.

The object of this was apparent. It would hurry matters. It would jump the Thaw case right into the Supreme Court, over the heads of the nineteen other cases which were ahead of Harry.

On September 24 Clifford W. Hartridge and John B. Gleason of Thaw's counsel came before Justice Bischoff of the Supreme Court, to argue for a transfer of Harry's case from the General Sessions calendar to the Supreme Court.

It had been reported that Jerome would not oppose the request, but when Hartridge and Gleason arrived in court they found Assistant District Attorney Smythe there to fight any transfer.

Gleason opened by telling the judge that Thaw and Newport are today observing "Suffrage Day" by going through the streets selling suffrage journals. Each time Gleason shook her shoulder in scrlled, "Votes for Women."

Justice Bischoff said that he had not been approached by any one in the matter. He could see no reason why the case should not be tried in the regular order. He would not grant the motion.

Justice Bischoff, in finding that the Thaw case belonged on the General Sessions calendar, said that the claim that a Supreme Court trial would be more speedy was not enough to justify the transfer requested.

If speed alone were cause for the transfer, said the learned Justice, then every one of the prisoners now awaiting trial in murder charges, would be justified in demanding transfer to the Supreme Court calendar.

All the accused men, the decision went on, are entitled to early trial, but the necessities of the orderly conduct of the public duties entrusted to the District Attorney must be considered in each case. It was not for the court to sit in review, to disregard arbitrarily the statement of the District Attorney that the removal of this case would seriously impede the expedition of the District Attorney's official business.

So far as any difficult questions of law that might arise in the Thaw trial, making a transfer desirable, Justice Bischoff said that no facts had been given him to show it.

The mere fact that the Thaw case had aroused newspaper comments and widespread interest, together with the supposed difficulty in picking a jury, likewise constituted no good ground for changing the case to the Supreme Court.

Thaw's lawyers lost on all points and Jerome had scored his first victory at this early stage of the case. It began to look as though Harry's mother was fortunate if he came to trial before the time for snow to fly.

* * * *

A distinguished caller at Harry's cell in the Aqueduct was Mrs. Caroline Lee Hentz Trask, the society matron, poetess and author. Mrs. Trask is best known for her literary work under the nom de plume of "Julia Gordon." Mrs. Cooper said afterwards:

My visit had no significance, other than an expression of sympathy and friendship by one who, for years, has been a friend of Mrs. William Thaw, the prisoner's mother. It was friendship, or kindness, or whatever you choose to call it, that suggested my visit to the Tombs.

OMEN BIG FOOD POWER, SAYS CASSIDY

Mr. Cassidy tells women today how they can help along the pure food cause. And that means how they can be assured their husbands and children shall not have their health undermined with doped or inferior food. He cites what women are doing in other sections, and what they could do in Boston and New England, simply by demanding of their food dealer PURE food.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

I want to talk to you women of Boston and New England today to impress upon you the tremendous power you can wield to secure pure food.

I am receiving numerous letters daily from women asking me: "What can I do to help along the pure food cause?"

My answer is: "Insist on your food dealer giving you pure food."

You all know that the dollar is king of the food world. Each of you contributes to the making of that dollar. Not one of you but represent that dollar in purchasing for your home.

Insist that you get that dollar's worth to the last nickel from the man who provides you with food. If you don't get what you have a right to demand, kick.

You may gain a reputation for the time being of being a crank, a kicker. Forget that part of it. Think of the influence you are wielding.

Supposing every woman in Boston and New England who gets one bad egg in a dozen makes a vigorous complaint with the man he buys from.

The kick you make to your dealer; he passes to the wholesale man. He in turn passes it along to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer begins to clean up his methods of doing business.

You women have no idea of the power you have over the food supply. Talk this idea over in your clubs. Make an issue of it, and you will surprise yourselves at the results.

See what the women did out in Chicago last week. They defeated for re-election to the Supreme Bench a judge who favored corporations in his rulings in numerous personal injury suits against the corporations.

It was only yesterday the AMERICAN carried a story that the women of Pittsburgh had established a boycott against Elgin butter, because of an advance in price they forced an imposition.

You will recall that the women of Philadelphia helped me to break a cold storage egg trust. When the AMERICAN broke the high price of eggs last winter it was possible only through the co-operation of the women.

This city has many women's clubs. They consider every conceivable matter under the sun. It is all good work and highly educational.

But is it of so great importance as that your tables shall be supplied with pure food?

How many of you know what goes into the bread, cake or pie you buy at the bakery. Several large bakeries are using rotten eggs in their pies and cakes. Does one of those wagons supply the small baker you buy of.

Yes, you women can do wonders in pure food work. Do it through your clubs or individually. Demand that you get pure food. Demand that your husband, and children especially, shall not have their health undermined by adulterated food.

A SONG OF SIXPENCE

CHAPTER I.

WHEN Emmy Moran was quite a young girl she one day overheard someone say to her mother, "What a beautiful figure your daughter has!" The remark, not intended for Emmy's ears, made a deep impression upon her; she never forgot it, but treasured it up in her mind as a tribute of some sort to her superior worth in the eyes of the world.

Later, when she came to understand more fully, she grew to be inordinately proud of her physical charms. She had a habit, when she undressed at night, of standing before the mirror, turning this way and that, contemplating with infinite satisfaction the soft roundness of her shoulders, the swelling beauty of her breasts, the delicate moulding of her waist and hips. It annoyed her sister Kattie excessively; she thought Emmy a fool, and told her so, with tiresome frankness, but Emmy only smiled—an enigmatic smile that had been characteristic of her since childhood, and reminded Kattie that if she expected ever to have anything in the world, she would be obliged to depend upon her beauty to get it for her—a decidedly sophisticated attitude for a girl of nineteen, and one that Kattie regarded as an evidence of mental immaturity.

At such times Emmy would remind her sister of Maude Evans, the daughter of the Pine street grocer, who had married a Chicago theatrical man, reputed to be worth a quarter of a million. Kattie's only reply would be a scornful, "Oh, that thing!" with an upturning of her charming nose, as though from the stenches of the bottomless pit. Miss Evans' meteoric career had carried a tale of scandal in its wake, highly charged with the flavor of brimstone.

While Emmy was hugely delighted with the game, her sister was a source of annoyance to her, failing, as it did, far short of her ideals of feminine beauty. Yet it is probable that in this judgment of her facial charms she did herself but scant justice.

BEAUTY OF FORM IS NOT UNCOMMON.

Beauty of form is after all not particularly uncommon in this land of racial mongrels, nor, for that matter, beauty of face either, of the commonly accepted sort, having to do with regular features, large eyes and the clear complexion of youth. But Emmy, in spite of her somewhat precocious store of worldly wisdom, was still insufficiently advanced in the ways of the world to appreciate the enormous possibilities of her bewitching visage which, framed in a mass of heavy brown hair, peered at her nightly from her mirror.

From some illicit ancestor she had filched a pair of impossible eyes, wide set, amorous, with as yet unfathomed depths of gray-green mystery beneath their sweeping lashes. The lids, somewhat prominent, had a provoking droop as they far concealed the eyes, and were a constant tendency to look at the world—at least the masculine portion of it—sidewise. This veiling of the tendency, although quite unconscious of her part, lent to her glance a languorous invitation by far than any mere open stare.

Her nose was of that peculiar feline type often found in women of French extraction—long, sensitive, and over what rounded at the tip—the nose of a Sarah Bernhardt. Her mouth, large and mobile, like that of a comedian, was to Emmy a source of despair, but none of the beauty pages of the Sunday papers offered the slightest suggestion whereby it might be converted into one of the rosebud type.

A vast deal of red-brown hair, somewhat coarse, but as vitally alive from root to tip as a mass of coiling serpents, made her face appear smaller than it really was. This Emmy tried to remedy by bearing it closely brushed over her ears, a la Cleo de Merode. It gave her a distinction not accorded to her by her elaborate system of rats and puffs.

Her complexion Emmy thought sallow—Kattie was all peaches and cream—but a Burne-Jones would have gone into ecstasies over its pale ivory, vestal as the rose leaves. Altogether, Emmy Moran gave promise of developing into a type that beside an dliable which engenders women's hatred and turns souls of men to water.

When Emmy characterized her good looks as her only asset in life, she spoke the dismal truth. From her mother, a woman of that unfortunate type whose only appeal is the weakness of others, to her weakness, she inherited nothing, either by birth or training, unless it were a deep rooted hatred for poverty and a silent contempt for the relationship of marriage as she saw it daily forking out its pitiful destiny under her nose.

FOUND HER HOME LIFE UNINTERESTING.

Her father, a hearty, unimaginative, somewhat mean-minded man, was the superintendent of a small local brick factory, a position which paid him thirty dollars a week. Of this sum he allowed his wife ten dollars a week for household expenses, paid eight dollars a week rent and spent the rest himself. To the two girls he gave nothing, for that poor Mrs. Moran, who loved her daughters in a pathetic, dog-like way, was obliged to resort to all sorts of petty devices and economies to squeeze from the market money enough to provide the girls with decent wearing apparel. As a result, the table suffered, or perhaps it would be more exact to say that Mrs. Moran suffered, for her better half was apt to complain bitterly, and sometimes threw things, when the meals failed to please him.

Both girls had been through the public schools—Kattie was twenty at this time—and both were ready, indeed anxious, to go to work, as so many of their friends did in this small Ohio town, but Mr. Moran, through some curious mental crotchet, refused to permit it. "My daughters don't need to be working girls," he would announce, from an imaginary state of prosperity indicated by half a dozen glasses of Steinhardt's beer. "Anyone might suppose I was no better than a common laborer." Then he would graciously present them each with a dollar and assume an air of martyrdom for the rest of the week. At other times he would lecture them at great length upon the duty they owed their parents—to marry well. "You're both good-looking," he would say, surprising them by half a compliment, "and you ought to be able to get it for her—a decidedly sophisticated attitude for a girl of nineteen, and one that Kattie regarded as an evidence of mental immaturity.

At such times Emmy would remind her sister of Maude Evans, the daughter of the Pine street grocer, who had married a Chicago theatrical man, reputed to be worth a quarter of a million. Kattie's only reply would be a scornful, "Oh, that thing!" with an upturning of her charming nose, as though from the stenches of the bottomless pit. Miss Evans' meteoric career had carried a tale of scandal in its wake, highly charged with the flavor of brimstone.

The lids, somewhat prominent, had a provoking droop as they far concealed the eyes, and were a constant tendency to look at the world—at least the masculine portion of it—sidewise. This veiling of the tendency, although quite unconscious of her part, lent to her glance a languorous invitation by far than any mere open stare.

Her nose was of that peculiar feline type often found in women of French extraction—long, sensitive, and over what rounded at the tip—the nose of a Sarah Bernhardt. Her mouth, large and mobile, like that of a comedian, was to Emmy a source of despair, but none of the beauty pages of the Sunday papers offered the slightest suggestion whereby it might be converted into one of the rosebud type.

A vast deal of red-brown hair, somewhat coarse, but as vitally alive from root to tip as a mass of coiling serpents, made her face appear smaller than it really was. This Emmy tried to remedy by bearing it closely brushed over her ears, a la Cleo de Merode. It gave her a distinction not accorded to her by her elaborate system of rats and puffs.

Her complexion Emmy thought sallow—Kattie was all peaches and cream—but a Burne-Jones would have gone into ecstasies over its pale ivory, vestal as the rose leaves. Altogether, Emmy Moran gave promise of developing into a type that beside an di

"BURNING CASH, BUT NOT FOR ME"--WALSH

By DAVID I. WALSH.

"I hereby charge"——

No; this is not a "wallop"—to borrow a word from Captain Gardner.

All I "charge" is that no candidate for the Governorship of Massachusetts ever went marching along to Election Day cheered by more faithful friends than mine.

The zeal and devotion of some of the older Democrats I have met in this campaign has affected me more than I would have believed was possible in politics.

There has not been a night during the campaign when some elderly Democrat has not pressed an offering in my hands; an offering of money.

I do not mean that we have ever equalled the Massachusetts Progressive record of $20,000, contributed at a single meeting—or was it $12,000? I am not sure about the figures—but I do mean to say that at almost every rally, certainly once every evening, SOME Democrat has given something.

The total, probably, will not amount to much more than one one-hundredth of the Progressive $20,000 record, and in every case the donor has been plainly a wage-earner, but the spirit behind the gifts has been something more inspiring than riches.

"God bless you!"

Almost invariably these have been the words which accompany the gifts. Fifty cents, one dollar—rarely "record" is the dollars—pressed into my hands on entering the hall, or as I am about to leave it. And "God bless you!" I know you have got much; this will help a little. Good luck to you!"

Confident?

Why shouldn't I be confident? Who wouldn't be confident when Democrats feel like this?

Burning Money, but Not for Walsh.

The automobile I have journeyed about in, from rally to rally, was loaned by a Democratic friend. Others have been donated, for an evening, now and then, to carry the other speakers.

As we come along to the Great Decision of next Tuesday I find the lack of funds. The fight is centring in Greater Boston. I am told that a small fortune will be spent hereabouts tonight—but not for me—for red fire and torchlights and motor cars and brass bands.

It only shows the disadvantages under which the poor man labors in this Commonwealth when he is entered in a contest for the governorship against millionaires. As I have said before in these columns, my success will be due in large part to the fact that there are THREE millionaires running against me. I dread to think of what might be the situation this afternoon—and just Tuesday night—if I had been compelled to meet only ONE millionaire.

To meet such a situation, I would have the State take over the entire business of these campaigns. I would have the State see to it that each candidate would have the same means of reaching all the voters with his story. A fair field and no favors! Equality of opportunity!

However, what I want to do today is to again urge the voters of Greater Boston—the Democratic voters—to go to the polls early next Tuesday without fail. Do not put it off until late in the day. Vote early.

Every Vote Will Count.

And do not say "but one vote, more or less, will never be missed," that your vote "won't count."

In Cambridge and Somerville last night I had the great pleasure of hearing Frank H. Pope of Leominster, one round date for State auditor.

Frank spoke about some of the great issues which have been decided BY ONE VOTE.

Oliver Cromwell was elected to the Long Parliament. Pope said, by ONE VOTE!

Scotland, Wales and Ireland were brought into the Union, he said, by ONE VOTE!

In our own country, Kansas, Missouri and Kentucky were admitted by a single vote.

Texas was admitted, and war with Mexico precipitated, by a single vote.

The war of 1812 was settled in the Senate of the United States by one vote.

By one vote Thomas H. Benton of Missouri—fourth in the great galaxy which included Webster, Clay and Calhoun—was elected to the Senate at Washington.

By one vote in the Electoral Commission of 1876, Samuel J. Tilden was robbed of the presidency.

Today I ask every Democrat of the thousands who will read this message in the AMERICAN to dismiss from his mind the impression—if it exists—that "one vote will not count." I know you will elect a Democrat to the Senate or the House. We want the Legislature.

Because 32,000 Democrats voted the ticket last year only as far down as Secretary of State, we find the treasurership, the auditorship and the office of attorney-general.

ALL the State offices were ours last year for marking the ballot wherever we saw the word "Democrat," and we quit at Secretary of State!

Let us resolve now that this will not happen next Tuesday.

I am more confident than ever of my own election on Tuesday by a plurality not far from 35,000 votes.

Wants Whole Ticket to Win.

Why am I still campaigning, then?

Because I want a Democratic Executive Council, a Democratic Senate, a Democratic House. I want to be able to DO things for you. I want the opportunity to put through the Democratic program. I want to return the government of this Commonwealth to the people of the Commonwealth.

More money is being used against me in this campaign than was ever been poured out before in a State campaign within my recollection.

Still I am confident. The straw ballots are cheering, in that every one of them indicates my election by a big plurality.

I say again that it is merely a question of getting out the full Democratic vote, and again I urge Democrats against being over-confident. Get out the vote and the party of the plain people will take Beacon Hill—in the name of the plain people and in the service of the plain people—to hold it for a generation.

Cured His Rupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no long time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information to any one who may send a name and address. Mr. Rudolf Schuessler, 1144 Rudolf Schuessler Building, 10 Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

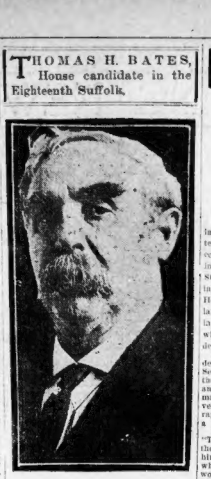
THOMAS H. BATES,

House candidate in the Eighteenth Suffolk.



Bates Fights Collar Man in Eighteenth

Seeks Election to the House from District in Suffolk.

Thomas H. Bates, one-time Independence Leaguer, former State Senator in California, and identified with national life, the Progressive candidate for the House from the Eighteenth Suffolk District, has made a rousing campaign.

With the election only three days away, there are free predictions that Captain Bates will win out over Patrick E. Maray, Jr.—the Democratic candidate, who has worn a New Haven collar since his vote for New Haven measures at the last Legislature.

Mr. Bates was a close friend of Michael Davitt, Henry George, Patrick Ford and other prominent land leaguers. He was a leader in the Independence League fights in this State, and is one of the best known men in Roxbury.

Cyclist Sought as the Slayer of Two

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 1.—Two persons were killed early today, and while their bodies were found miles apart, the police were convinced that both are the victims of a motor cyclist, who, while speeding through Williamstown, fired three shots into a group of boys holding a Hallowe'en celebration. One bullet struck Ivan Greiff, aged seven years, in the right temple. M. Collatz, an itinerant fruit merchant, was found dead in the road.

Sanity Board for Mrs. von Claussen

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Dr. Carlos McDonald and Dr. William Mabon were appointed by Judge Malone today as a commission to inquire into the mental condition of Mrs. Ida von Clausen, now in the Tombs on a charge of sending a threatening letter to Attorney Charles Straus. A writ of habeas corpus will be sued out in behalf of Mrs. von Clausen, who insists she is not insane.

BURNS OPENS THE STILWELL 'BLACK BOOK'

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Detective William J. Burns today made public the contents of part of them of the "Black book" containing the determinate record of the interview at Sing Sing in which former State Senator Stephen J. Stillwell, serving time for bribery, told John A. Hennessy and a lawyer representing William Sulzer that he would swing six votes in the high court of impeachment, before which Sulzer was tried, in favor of the defendant in exchange for a pardon.

Stillwell further offered to produce evidence which, he charged, would send Senator James J. Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated Sulzer and Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, to jail. Stillwell in his conversation, not knowing that a stenographer was copying it at the other end of a dictaphone, said:

Referring to the Tammany faction as "They," the convict declared that it was the intention of the organization to keep him in jail notwithstanding a message which had come to him that "they" would get a pardon from Martin H. Glynn, now Governor, if Sulzer was ousted from the executive mansion.

Walsh Will Win, Bird Second, Says Mayor

"Foss Will Finish Fourth," Predicts Fitzgerald.

Mayor Fitzgerald is sure of David I. Walsh's ability to win the gubernatorial election on Tuesday. He places Bird second, Gardner in third place and Governor Foss last, in the leading editorial in his weekly publication.

The Mayor says: "Walsh's vote can not be less than 150,000, and will be near 160,000. Bird should get above 100,000; Gardner just less than 100,000, and Foss below 50,000."

7 Candidates All Sitting in a Row; Wait Till Tuesday, Then You'll Know

The voters out in Melrose are giving the ding-dong to those old stand-patters who say the voters don't know what they're doing. The Melrose voters had to choose between Progressive Candidate Cox and Mr. Al Bliss for the Senate, and from indications, their choice is not going to please Mr. Bliss.

* * *

His feelings will be like his name, come Wednesday morning, it is freely predicted. Too many people who ought to know are saying: "Poor Bliss, he was a good chap—but—"

* * *

The explanation is that Mr. Bliss, who in his business life has certain gas and electric light company connections, couldn't seem to see the humanitarian side of a measure that came before the House.

* * *

When the wrecks on the political rocks have been removed next Tuesday we notice that the name of the man who made woman's power in politics will be screaming for succor. The speeches and the polow lamps may not be very profuse this year, but the women are doing practical things, under the guidance of a few of political brains in the Commonwealth.

* * *

What? Oh, yes, we know him. And he is doing for nothing what any great corporation would be glad to pay him profusely not to do.

* * *

John W. Vaughan is the Progressive candidate for District Attorney, and the other day he was making a hot speech down in Pemberton square courthouse. District Attorney Pelletier watched for a lull from his office windows. Mr. Pelletier, with the nominations of both the leading parties, and a record behind him of which he is not ashamed, is sure of re-election as is David Walsh. And that's out idea of the acme of certainty.

* * *

Dean Hurlbut of Harvard stirred up quite a little excitement by his recent article in a Harvard magazine. But have you noticed the good Dean's overpowering silence since he was called upon to "make good" his charges?

* * *

The Dean, as Mayor Fitzgerald said, should have a talk with the District Attorney if he knew what he was writing about. His generalities were a little too particular to be ignored.

* * *

Why don't Dean Hurlbut and Governor Foss collaborate on a thesis on Boston's politics?

* * *

The Governor is as good a political phrase maker as any man now in the country—since one distinguished American is at present engaged in shinning over the Andes, or whatever you call those South American mountains. But the Governor's "Tammany Trio" is more alliterative than applicable.

* * *

Dictionaries, please? Pass one to Tom Riley.

* * *

By the way, Governor Foss says the Tammany Trio tried to bludgeon him into certain appointments. Was the appointment of Tom Riley as a judge one of the appointments in question? We ask for the information.

Tobacco Habit Easily Conquered

A well known New Yorker of wide experience has written a book telling how the tobacco or snuff habit may be easily, completely banished in three days with delightful benefit.

The health improves wonderfully after the nicotine poison is out of the system. Calmness, tranquil sleep, clear mental power, good digestion and manly vigor, strong memory and a general gain in efficiency are among the many benefits reported. No more of that nervous feeling; no more need of pipe, cigar, cigarette or chewing tobacco to pacify the morbid desire. The author, Edw. J. Woods, 534 Sixth ave., 205 D, New York City, will send his book free on application to anyone who writes to him.

200 'NEWSIES' THEATRE GUESTS OF AMERICAN

LOWELL, Nov. 1.—The city newsboys, 200 strong, celebrated Hallowe'en at Keith's Theatre here, as guests of the Boston AMERICAN and its Lowell agent, Max Katze.

Actors, audience and "newsies" will remember the occasion for some time. The newsboys, headed by a band, paraded through the business streets and then marched into the theatre. Leading the procession was "Happy" the King of the Newsboys" from Boston.

The boys cheered the AMERICAN and Agent Katze as they marched. When they entered the theatre to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" from the band, the boys sang vigorously.

The entire first balcony was reserved for the "newsies," with boxes for "Happy" and the guests from Boston. "Happy" gave up his box seat, however, to mingle with the newsboys in the balcony.

The actors responded instantly to the situation furnished by the appreciative audience. The "newsies" followed the vaudeville action quickly and were first to laugh or applaud at joke and bright action.

They joined in the new songs, sending from the balcony a rousing chorus that was an added feature to the bill.

The boys enjoyed every act on the program and the audience on the floor was greatly interested in the boys and their fun, judging from the many friendly signals which were sent up toward the balcony rail.

When the show ended the boys before disbanding gave more cheers for the AMERICAN, for Agent Katze, for the Keith house and the actors.

Fatal Strike Riot in Indianapolis

One Killed and Six in Violence Following Carmen's Walkout.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 1.—One man was killed and six others injured early today in rioting which followed the walkout of street car motormen and conductors on city lines and inter-urban cars entering Indianapolis. The strike became effective at midnight, when thousands of italians re-strikers thronged the downtown streets.

There were disturbances in many sections of the city, and the entire police force of Indianapolis was kept on duty until after daylight. An hour after the strike was declared effective rioting began in the neighborhood of several car barns.

Fifty arrests were made during the night. An automobile patrol wagon, rushing towards a crowd that was fighting, ran down one man and killed him.

The Portland schooner Henrietta Simmons, bound from South Amboy, N. J., to Augusta, Me., is in a serious condition, thirty-four miles east south-east of Boston light. She is reported to be drifting helplessly with all the sails blown away.

Shortly after sailing for London today, the Leyland liner Anglian reported the position of the distressed vessel to the news room here wireless, and advised that help be sent to her.

FEDERALS OPEN WAR ON MAJORS AT BIG MEETING

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—If the Federal League men at their much-talked-of meeting at Indianapolis today, show that they are not depending upon stage money they will subject organized baseball to a jarring surprise. The Federals will be represented by six established clubs, which finished the recent season in Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Indianapolis.

Each club has promised to post $25,000 either in cash or certified checks at today's conclave to guarantee salaries for star players who will be asked to jump the reserve rule, the bulwark of organized baseball.

The promoters of the new outlaw circuit plan to put a big league ball player at the head of every team in the circuit to make war on organized baseball by signing players now already under contract, with guarantees of salaries for periods of from one to three years, and to have at least two major league stars on each team.

Many sensational reports are coming from the Federal League camp. George Stovall, former manager of the St. Louis Browns, is said to have signed with the Kansas City team. In St. Louis it is rumored that Ed Konetchy will manage the Federals in the Mound City. Jake Stahl is reported to be considering an offer from James A. Gilmore to manage the Federals in Chicago, while John Kling can have the management of the Buffalo team at his own terms.

Smith Makes Short Work of Miller

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Gunboat Smith made short work of Charley Miller of San Francisco at the Atlantic Garden A. C. last night. Smith knocked him out in less than a minute of boxing in the third round. He accomplished the trick with a hard right to the jaw.

Gallant Willing to Clash with Baldwin

McLean Says Matty Has Gone Back and Would Be Easy for Chelsea Boy.

By JACK CONWAY.

THERE are a number of people, and they do not all hail from New York, either, who believe that Dan Morgan is the best hurler among the Eastern boxing managers. This is a free country, and so every man has a right to his own opinion, but we believe that if some kind of a match could be arranged between Morgan and Alex McLean, who spends the greater part of his time in Revere and its suburbs, Alex would not finish second best.

But let us get down to our story. Eddie Murphy's challenge in behalf of Matty Baldwin for a bout with Jack Britton, Eddie Murphy or Gilbert Gallant was only a few hours old when Alex called at this office with blood in his eyes, as the dime novel writers would express it.

The Revere man slowly removed his head covering like a Harvard football warrior would his headgear when the battle was becoming hard. He then expressed himself thusly:

"If Eddie Murphy is really anxious to match Baldwin with Gallant, he need not worry about his ability to make the match. There is one boxer in the East whom Gallant is able to vanquish on any of the seven days of the week. His name is Matty Baldwin.

ASKS FOR A FORFEIT.

"BALDWIN and Gallant have already met once. Baldwin was awarded the decision at the end of twelve rounds of exciting fighting. The decision, however, was a poor one. Gallant had the best of the going in the majority of the rounds and should have been given the verdict.

"If Baldwin and Gallant clash again, there will not be any doubt as to which man is entitled to the decision. Gallant will have such a lead that even a blind man would be able to predict the result, as it were.

"If Baldwin meets Gallant again and fights the way that he did against 'Kayo' Brown the other night, the Chelsea boy will knock him out. Of course, Baldwin's admirers will state that he has never been stopped during six years in the ring, but there is a beginning to everything. Matty has gone back, and will box once too often for the rest of the old-timers.

"I am sure Gallant would have easily beaten Brown if he had been in Baldwin's place Tuesday evening. He would probably have knocked him out, and I am sure that 'Kayo' would not have bit Gallant as often as he did Baldwin.

"All that Murphy has to do if he desires to match Baldwin with Gallant is to make an engagement to meet at the AMERICAN and be prepared to post a forfeit to bind the match. The bout can then go to the club offering the best inducements. There is a possibility that the Atlas A. A. will be able to conduct a show at the Arena on November 17, and if it is, I believe that a contest between Baldwin and Gallant might be staged there."

WALSH IN BOUT TONIGHT.

JIMMY WALSH will exchange punches with Willie Jones of New York in a ten-round contest in Brooklyn tonight. Walsh has been boxing in good style lately. He outclassed the clever Joe Goldberg in Syracuse Monday night, and does not believe that he will experience much difficulty in annexing the scalp of Jones. Jimmy is in the best of condition, as he says that a boxer cannot afford to take any unnecessary chances, as opponents who look to be easy on paper often put up the hardest kind of battles within the hemp ropes.

WILLIE RITCHIE is doing light training for his bout with Leach Cross which will take place in Madison Square Garden, New York, on November 10. The lightweight champion is spending a great deal of his time playing the ancient and honorable game of golf.

The residents of New York have got an idea that Cross is going to defeat Ritchie. Some of the dentist's most ardent supporters believe that he will land a dream wallop.

In the opinion of the writer, there is about as much chance of Cross knocking our Ritchie as there is of the coal trust filling our coal bins with coal for use during the coming Winter. Ritchie may not be able to punch as hard as Cross, but he is a far better boxer than the New Yorker, and, according to Ad Wolgast, he possesses a right-hand punch which is a sure bread winner.

ATLAS BOUT IN AIR.

"THE Atlas battle of November 17." This would be a good title for a little one act drama. The Atlas A. A. will hold its last show at the Arena on November 11 and several dozen boxers claim that they are going to perform at that show. The Atlas club directors claim that they are trying to arrange for a contest between Jack Britton and Eddie Murphy. Britton's end of the match has already been arranged while there is some doubt whether Murphy will return from the West in time to get into condition for a contest with a boxer of Britton's ability.

Joe Woodman, Langford's manager, states that the "Tar Baby" will meet "Stanbury" Smith on November 11. As Smith would not like anything better than to battle Langford, it is evident that the Atlas A. A. directors could have this match if they wanted it.

Personally the writer believes that the "fans" would prefer a meeting between Britton and Murphy to the contest between the big fellows.

HARVARD WINS CROSSCOUNTRY FROM CORNELL

The Harvard cross-country team defeated Cornell today in a close race by the score of 31 to 35. The contest was a exciting affair and the result was in doubt until the very end.

J. S. Hoffmire of Cornell carried off the individual honors winning first place in 31m. 47 2-5s. He was closely pressed by R. S. Boyd of Harvard, who finished in 32m. 24-5s.

Boyd of Harvard took the lead at the start of the race and held it for two and a half miles, when he was passed by Hoffmire, who crossed the finishing line a winner by a comfortable margin.

Third place fell to the lot of F. H. Blackman, who sported the Crimson of Harvard. C. L. Speiden, the great Cornell runner, finished in fourth position, while H. D. Maclaire of Harvard was in 4th place.

Ban Johnson Favors Triple World's Series

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—President Ban Johnson of the American League has begun a self-imposed task of improving on the present method of determining the best baseball team in the world. He favors a triple series with the three ranking clubs of the two big leagues as contestants; the pennant winners of each circuit to compete against each other, the two second place teams to engage in a similar series and the third raters to get together.

MITCHELL'S SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

THE New York newspapers are full of Federal League stuff. Wilbert Robinson, just released by the Giants, is to manage the Baltimore team the Federals are to establish there. Jake Stahl is to close his rolltop and forsake the banking business to manage the Chicago club in the Federal League. John Miller, the Pittsburgh first baseman, is to cut loose from Barney Dreyfuss and Fred Clarke and take the management of the new Pittsburgh club. And so on, and so on.

WHATEVER the result of the election for President of the National League the new president is likely to have less trouble in handling the magnates than past incumbrants have had. At least, he will have less trouble from Chicago, it would seem. Charles Webb Murphy has turned over a new leaf. He has become subdued. No more fiery attacks on the president of the National League are to be expected.

Murphy did not have a very successful financial season in Chicago. Comiskey drew the crowds. The Old Roman has the town sewed up and Murphy has to take the leavings. This has made Murphy do a lot of thinking and he has become convinced that the only way he can acquire any popularity in the Windy City is to keep his mouth shut.

WHEN Murphy had world's championship teams and Frank Chance as manager he was very arrogant. His club was very loose, to say the least. But the more he said the more enemies he made, so that when his team ceased to win championships Murphy found himself high and dry on the rocks of unpopularity. The Chicago newspapers finally refused to print what he had to say, on the ground that he was a common pest.

There was only one thing to be done and that was to stop talking. But this finally grew because a man who had been in the habit of spilling words. Now he comes timidly to the front and falls into line with the published statements of Garry Herrmann and Ban Johnson by saying that he has found considerable justice in the demands of the baseball players. He also says the players will probably receive more attention from the club owners if they are represented by active ball players rather than a paid representative.

"DOC" WHITE, the veteran Southpaw of the White Sox, has decided not to take the trip around the world. Instead, he will spend the Winter filling in vaudeville engagements.

"Doc" is a dentist. It would seem that there are other things he could fill rather than vaudeville engagements.

IT is quite safe to say that Wilbert Robinson was not released by the Giants without his requesting it. McGraw valued the old-time Oriole star because of his great ability to judge young pitchers and to develop them along the right lines.

Robie is credited with having developed Marquard, Tesreau and Demaree. By some uncanny system he seemed able to instill control into the wild youngsters that joined the New York team. Robbie was indoved to come out of his retirement four years ago by McGraw, who played with him in the old Baltimore days. They owned a cafe together in Baltimore and Robbie has always been McGraw's closest friend.

Robinson was a member of Ned Hanlon's famous Baltimore champions of 1894, 1895 and 1896, and was a major league backstop from 1886 to 1902. After retiring from the Baltimore American League team in 1902, he announced that he would never again don a uniform.

He was born in Hudson, Mass., in 1867, and began his professional career in 1888 with the Haverhill club of the New England League. In his major league career Robinson caught 1,259 games.

RUBE OLDRING has a team of "All-Star Leaguers" that he is barnstorming around New York. Among the members of his team is Dick Rudolph of the Boston Nationals.

WHILE the officials of the major leagues say they regard the efforts of the Federal League as a joke, they are, nevertheless, watching its affairs closely. It is stated by a National League club owner that as National League employed detectives all last season to attend to the games of the Federal League and give them accurate reports on its affairs. He also stated that the reports of the attendance at the games of the outlaws were greatly exaggerated, and that at some of the games in Indianapolis and Kansas City the attendance was only a few hundred when reports had it that the attendance was much larger.

TO offset the activity of the Federal League, all sorts of rumors are current. One is that the American Association will be enlarged to ten clubs, and teams will be placed in Pittsburgh and Cleveland. This will not be done, however, until it is learned just how far the Federal League expects to go next season.

If the American Association plays in Pittsburgh and Cleveland, it will be on the days when the major league clubs of those cities are on the road. They will use the major league parks. The outlaws have not much of a following in these two cities, but they have gained a footing in Kansas City and Indianapolis. In the latter city, a new site has been purchased and a grandstand of the major league type will be erected before next season. The Indianapolis site used to be a cemetery, but the outlaws are not superstitious.

George Stovall has been engaged to manage the Kansas City team next season, and, according to the outlaw promoters, all the new managers will induce players to "jump" the majors and join the new league.

Williams Expects Close Battle Today

SPRINGFIELD, Nov. 1.—The Williams football eleven will face the strong Springfield Y. M. C. A. College team this afternoon. Present indications point to a hard-fought, closely-contested battle between the two institutions, according to comparative scores. The Springfield aggregation rolled up twenty-six points against New York University, while the Purple's score against the same team amounted to twenty-three points gained under the most adverse weather conditions. The Williams team will probably present the following lineup tomorrow: Vinal, l. e.; Furness, l. t.; Eells, l. g.; Tomkins, c.; Driscoll, r. g.; Walker, r. t.; Clark, r. e.; Hunnewell, q. b.; Tooley, l. h. b.; Payson, r. h. b.; Turner, f. b.

OVER TWO SCORE SCHOOL TEAMS IN PLAY TODAY

Today the schoolboy elevens will receive their hardest tests of the year on the gridiron. Up to this time the games, with the exception of a few, have been or only preliminary type, but now the teams have reached their top notch form and the games up to and including Thanksgiving Day, will be the ones that count.

Two score of battles will be staged on the schoolboy gridiron today.

The all-important of these are Waltham vs. Malden and Somerville vs. Newton.

Somerville will oppose Newton High at Claflin Field, Newtonville. The Red and Blue expects to annex another win. Coach Dickinson's lads, however, have not dropped a game this Fall, and are confident of beating their opponents. After its splendid showing against Waltham, Somerville will give the Newton fellows a good chance to compete their team with the Watch City boys, as Newton journeys to Waltham one week from today.

Undefeated Elevens Clash.

Waltham High is taking on a tough proposition when it plays Malden High at Waltham.

Neither of these teams have been beaten this Fall, and they are leading with several other teams for the State championship. A victory means a great deal to either.

Malden has practiced hard for this contest, and with the assistance of John Hurley, the former Bowdoin and Malden High star, Coach Goode has whipped the team into excellent shape. The game should be a thriller, full of brilliant plays and spectacular runs.

Everett High opens its Suburban League schedule with Melrose at Melrose today. Coach Cleo O'Donnell's charges have not been defeated so far this season, and have displayed some good football. They expect to win, but are taking no chances, as Melrose did close to a tie score when it held Malden to a tie score.

Big City Title Game.

English and Mechanic Arts High will battle it out at Volkmann Field, Allston. This is one of the city championship games. English and Commerce are leading for the title, as the Blue and Blue has defeated Dorchester High and the Fenway boys beat Mechanic Arts. Latin School has not played a local eleven as yet, so their standing cannot be made.

St. John's Prep will have to show snap when it meets Boston College High at Dunbar avenue. The Boston boys have shown great strides of improvement since Coach Donahue has taken hold of the reins and will give the Dancers boys a hard contest. Many prominent men will be present at this game. It is expected that Cardinal O'Connell will attend.

Latin School will play with Moses Brown at Providence. This is the first time a local eleven has played with the Providence boys. The Boston team should be a winner, in spite of its crippled condition.

Cummings at Baker Banquet.

ATHOL, Nov. 1.—Arthur Cummings of Athol, who has the distinction of being the inventor of curved ball pitching, attended a banquet as special guest at Hartford, Ct., in honor of J. Franklin Baker, third baseman on the champion Athletic team.

WELL? WHAT OF IT?

Two Changes Made in Princeton Lineup

PRINCETON, Nov. 1.—With a hard game with Holy Cross for today, the Princeton coaches announced radical changes in the Tiger lineup and the students here are anxiously waiting to see how the new combination works.

Frank Glick, who has played right half, has been shifted to quarterback, displacing "Stew" Baker. Another change is the installation of Law in the backfield and he will do the punting in place of Captain "Hobe" Baker who is needed elsewhere.

The Holy Cross squad arrived here yesterday and the players were in high spirits and figured on giving the Princeton eleven a defeat. The Worcester squad was in the best of condition for a hard game.

Wilbur Robinson to Coach Colt Pitchers

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The fact that Wilbert Robinson has been formally released by the Giants has been taken to mean that he will not return to McGraw. But Robinson, it is said, has been let out to help McGraw keep inside the thirty-five-man limit during the usual period. Robinson promised McGraw some time ago that he would take charge of the players at Martin in February. When that time arrives Robbie will bob up as usual. With Robinson absent, McGraw, it is believed, would have his own troubles, as the big fellow always has rendered valuable assistance both as a coach and as the manager's right hand man. If Robinson should remain a free agent he could have a job with Frank Chance at a fat salary.

Cornell Game Crucial Test for the Crimson

Question Harvard's Fighting Spirit Without Mahan, Hitchcock and O'Brien, Three of Its Stars

By SYDE LYNES.

HARVARD meets with what may well be considered a crucial test when the big eleven over the river lines up against Cornell in the Stadium today, for the Crimson enters the game under very unfavorable conditions, with three of the best men out of the contest with injuries. In this conflict, shorn of much of its power, Harvard will show just what sort of fighting spirit there is in the eleven, for nothing so cruelly tests the calibre of a team as to enter the last leg of a race with the team badly battered and many new men in the organization.

Cornell on the other hand has put in a hard week of work after the defeat by the University of Pittsburgh last Saturday, and has come to Cambridge to battle to a finish. While the Ithacans have not been saying much or making any predictions of any kind, it is pretty evident that they expect to hold Harvard down pretty well, if they do not do more, while supporters of the Crimson eleven, sustained by the recent good showing of the eleven, and forgetting to take into consideration the somewhat disorganized state of the team at present, look forward confidently to a victory.

GOOD WEATHER PROMISED.

IDEAL football weather was promised for the fray, and it seemed a pity that when the first opportunity to play on a real gridiron was offered Harvard should not be able to stage its best eleven.

Hitchcock, the regular left tackle, and Mahan, the halfback, certainly cannot enter the game, while O'Brien, regular left end, is still hanging on the ragged edge of the injured list, but could go into the game on a pinch. Withington, the best the Crimson can find just now for the vacant tackle position, owing to a recent injury to Curtis, is far from a strong player, while with Coolidge next to him, a more or less inexperienced player, and handicapped by lack of weight, the left wing of the Crimson line threatens to be very weak, and will probably be the main point of attack for the Cornell eleven.

BRADLEE WILL HELP.

BRADLEE, the halfback, one of the cleverest defensive players in the Crimson backfield, and Trumbull playing a roving game, will help to guard this weakened flank and ward off any blows that the chief tactician of the Cornell eleven may see fit to aim in this direction.

LINES EVEN IN WEIGHT.

CORNELL has a fairly heavy line to spots, but the lightness of Coal at centre and Mallory at right tackle brings the average of the quintet from tackle to tackle, down to a very deceptive point. The average of this combination is but 180 pounds, but this is also true of the Crimson, as Withington's lighter weight brings the average down to 184 pounds, and things are evened up.

HYLAND HEAVIEST CORNELLIAN.

HYLAND, who will play opposite to Cowen, the new guard, tips the scales at 197 pounds, and is the heaviest man in the Cornell rush line. With him as an opener of holes, this point, particularly as it is next to Withington, will doubtless be hammered. Taking into consideration the eleven men on each team, there is but a slight difference in weight between the men, and that is in the favor of Harvard, about four pounds to the man, a very negligible difference.

BARRETT A GREAT KICKER.

IN Barrett, who will probably play fullback in today's game, despite the fact that he was tried out at quarter for a while, Cornell has a man who is very dependable in every style of kicking. He punts for an average of over forty yards, and is a place kicker of no mean ability, while his performance in drop kicking is consistent, and he is a dangerous man anywhere within the thirty-five-yard line.

CORNELL TO USE FORWARD PASS.

CORNELL was stated to make a good deal of use of the forward pass against Harvard, as its rushing game has not been of great effect thus far this year, while a great deal of attention has been paid to the open game, particularly with reference to the forward pass.

In recognition of this fact, Coach Haughton drilled his men in a long tackleless scrimmage yesterday afternoon in the Stadium on defensive formations for breaking up the forward pass, so the Crimson will be laying for anything in this department today.

PENNOCK SHOULD HOLD MUSS.

CAPTAIN MUNN of the Cornell team is playing a strong game at left guard, but he will have his hands full against the "Tartar" of the Harvard rushline, Pennock, today, as little need be feared from him. Pennock is not a spectacular performer, but he is the one man on the Harvard team that lives in the game, and one who can be depended upon to give the best he has when called upon to do so.

BRICKLEY IN POOR SHAPE.

HARVARD will probably be handicapped before the contest has progressed a great way by the loss of Brickley and, of course, with him, his drop kicking ability. Brickley is not in the best of shape and is more or less bruised up. Chances are not going to be taken with him and he will be saved as much as possible for the coming games. With a stubborn defence upon the part of the Cornell rush line, however, Brickley's toe would be invaluable, and the Crimson can ill afford to spare him.

AMHERST, Nov. 1.—The biggest game of the year on Amherst schedule will be played with Dartmouth on Pratt Field today. Amherst does not expect to win, but is satisfied to hold the Green to a low score.

Green realizes that Amherst always makes its hardest fight against Dartmouth, so no large score is anticipated. The greatest activity prevails among the second string backs about their showing today, for it is expected that one of them will be billed for a steady job as a result of it.

Dartmouth Freshies in Clash with Dean

FRANKLIN, Nov. 1.—The Dartmouth freshmen football team will line up against the strong Dean eleven here today. This is the freshmen's hardest game of the year, and great interest is shown as to whether they can withstand the powerful onslaught of the Dean backs.

Schoolboy Sport News and Notes

DUMMER ACADEMY plays its first contest in two weeks against Gloucester High today. This is the first Fall in eight years that the Gloucester school has been represented by an eleven. The game will be played at Gloucester. It has aroused much interest among the town people.

* * *

THE schoolboy offers some good games today and large crowds are expected to witness each battle. The school elevens appear to be of better calibre than they have been for many years.

* * *

IT is rumored that Dennis of Beverly Industrial School is to enter Beverly High. If he does he should be a great help to that team, for he has been putting up a fine game for the Industrial School.

* * *

TWO captains of football teams have resigned their positions. Captain O'Callaghan has quit the leadership of Lynn English High, and it is rumored that Captain Smith of Beverly High will resign his captaincy.

* * *

FOLEY is putting up a good game at end on Malden High. He excels in handling forward passes and gets down under punts fast.

* * *

NOT much open play was displayed in the Hingle-Cambridge Latin game. Old-style football was used by both teams. Four forward passes were attempted, two of which were successful and went for long gains. Both of these passes were made by Hingle.

Yale Coaches Fear Result of Game With Colgate Team

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 1.—Yale will face Colgate here today and the Elis eleven is looking forward to the hardest contest on the gridiron this season. Unless the Yale attack has gained in power the past week the team will be upset by Colgate, said a prominent Yale graduate, who is close to football. The Yale coaches make no secret of the fact that they believe that Colgate will prove harder to defeat than Brown University, and they fear the end rushes of Quarterback Huntington,—especially because Yale's two regular ends, Avery and Carter, have been in the hospital all this week.

Brown-Tufts Game Has Been Called Off

Announcement was made today of the cancellation of the Brown-Tufts football game, scheduled for November 22 at Providence. The announcement followed a meeting in Boston of the athletic heads and coaches of both institutions, following which it was explained that Brown, having had Harvard on her schedule for several years at an earlier date than this year, expected to have the game at the usual time. On learning of the schedule Coach Robinson of Brown objected to having so hard a game as that with Tufts on November 22, and requested the Brown management to cancel the game.

The game was canceled, but the cordial relations which have previously existed between the institutions were continued by completing satisfactory arrangements for the schedule of next year.

Complete Plans for Big Barry Reception

WORCESTER, Nov. 1.—The committee in charge of the arrangements for the banquet and reception next Monday to Jack Barry of the Athletics completed its plans today. Connie Mack will come and George M. Cohan, the actor, will also attend. Mack and Cohan are Brookfield boys, and the Brookfield brass band, made famous in one of Cohan's plays, is coming down to act as escort in a short parade.

Congressman Samuel E. Winslow, the old Harvard player, who steered his team through an entire season without a defeat, is to be toastmaster, and Samuel J. Elder of Boston, who played for Yale in his college days, will be one of the speakers.

Australian Sculler Challenges Barry

SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 1.—Ernest Barry, champion sculler of the world and professional sculling champion of England was today challenged to defend his title by Paddon, present champion of Australia. Paddon won his Australian title today by defeating Richard Arnst by three lengths and immediately challenged Barry.

LEADING BIKERS OF THE WORLD CLASH TONIGHT

The preliminary events to the six-day bicycle race will be held at the Arena tonight, and includes motor-paced, sprinting, pursuit and five-mile open races. Judging from the calibre and standing of the men entered it should be a very attractive card for the opening.

The new track at the Arena has been completed and is considered the fastest ever built.

Consequently, followers of the paced game should witness some exciting event when Jimmy Moran, Clarence Carman, Percy Lawrence and Elmer Collins come together tonight. The motor-paced race will be contested in two heats and the winner of each will be pitted against each other in the final. Jimmy Moran will meet Carman in the first heat and Collins will oppose Lawrence in the second.

Unusual interest is being displayed in the pursuit and sprinting events in which the best riders of America and Australia are entered. Frank Cavanagh of Newark will be pitted against Corry and Spears of Australia in the first heat of the match sprint race, while Joe Fogler and Ivor Lawson will meet Alf Grenda of the Antipodes in the second heat.

Reggie McNamara, who has ridden every man in Australia and America into the ground in an unpaced race, will receive considerable attention when he and Corry battle Hill and Root in the team pursuit contest.

Don't Let the Saying That You Will Be "Dead a Long Time" Excuse You for Making a Fool of Yourself

BOSTON AMERICAN,
SATURDAY,
NOVEMBER 1, 1913.

THE AMERICAN'S MAGAZINE AND

No. 3 of Miss Dix's Series:

SEVEN MISTAKES OF MATRIMONY

By DOROTHY DIX

THE third deadly mistake of matrimony is:
TO MARRY OUT OF YOUR CLASS.

This is true whether you marry above or below yourself, whether you have to undergo the torture of realizing that you are being dragged down by your husband or wife, or are forced to suffer the humiliation and agony of being hoisted up to his or her level. There is no peace nor happiness in either process.

If you should be happy though married, don't marry out of your own class either financially, socially, intellectually or morally.

Of course the least important in equality is the matter of money, but this is only unimportant when the advantage of money is with the man. A poor girl may marry a rich man without endangering their chances of domestic bliss, since custom makes man the purse bearer and woman the recipient of his generosity, but a poor man marries a rich woman at his peril.

Marry in your own social class. Man make the mistake of marrying out of their own order oftener than women do, because there is a tradition that the husband lifts the wife to his social level. That may be true abroad, where the wife of a duke becomes a duchess though he took her from the slums, but it is not true in this country, where women make society, and where a man's social position is determined mainly by his wife.

ANOTHER ILLUSION

The illusion also obtains among men that they can develop their wives, and a girl can be changed into anything that her husband pleases. Mislead by this story, a man who comes of cultured and refined people, and whose mother and sisters are gentlewomen, often marries a girl far beneath him in the social scale, one who has had little education whose family is loud and florid, and whose associations have been common and vulgar.

She believes that marriage will change her into the likeness of his mother and sister, but nature is stronger than marriage, and as she grows older she grows more like her own people. You cannot change blood and breeding. The Flanders mare remains the Flanders mare to the end of the chapter. She never becomes a thoroughbred, and the man whose taste is for thoroughbreds will vex himself and her, too, as long as they live, demanding from her the impossible, expecting in her the qualities that he has no right to expect.

As for the woman who marries a man out of her social class, God pity him and her both, for there is nothing else on earth that gets so much on a woman's nerves as a husband of whom she is ashamed, and assuredly there can be nothing more lacerating to a man's vanity than a wife who stands in the attitude to him of a school mistress and a mistress of deportment, and who is continually correcting him and telling him what he can do, and mustn't do.

THE REAL CAUSE

Nine-tenths of the tragedies of matrimony are the direct results of people not marrying in their own intellectual class. Men captured by a beautiful face marry women whose heads are stuffed with sawdust. Immature girls, blinded by romance, marry men with no more intelligence than a tailor's dummy, or men who are mere money-making machines. Then these men and women who are big-brained, great-souled and broad of sympathy find out that they are tied for life to those with whom they have not one thought, or aspiration in common, and who do not even understand them. It is as if one vitally alive was bound hand and foot to a corpse.

Finally, marry in your own moral class. If you are religious, if you place great stress on the moralities, and even the conventions, marry one of the same ilk, and whose conduct squares with the Ten Commandments. Don't marry a poor, weak sinner, believing that you can forgive his—or her—fault, and that you will reform him or her.

You may forgive, but you will never forget, and always the blackness of the wrong that has been done and that cannot be ignored will shadow your happiness.

Not often a man marries a woman with a past. Occasionally he does, however, but it almost never turns out well. No matter how straight the wife walks, the husband always has suspicions of her, and in times of domestic stress by word or look he throws up to her face the thing that she most wishes forgotten. It is a cowardly and ungenerous thing to do, but very human.

The man who has sown his wild oats fares better than the woman when he marries. So does his wife, for men and women sinners are not judged by the same standard, and it is less mortifying for a wife to know that people are recalling her husband's lurid past than it is for a husband to know that gossip is busy with his wife's; but all the same, doubtless the man with a noble, distinctive wife, who is lifting him up to the higher life, could unfold a tale of suffering that wouldn't give the early martyrs anything on him.

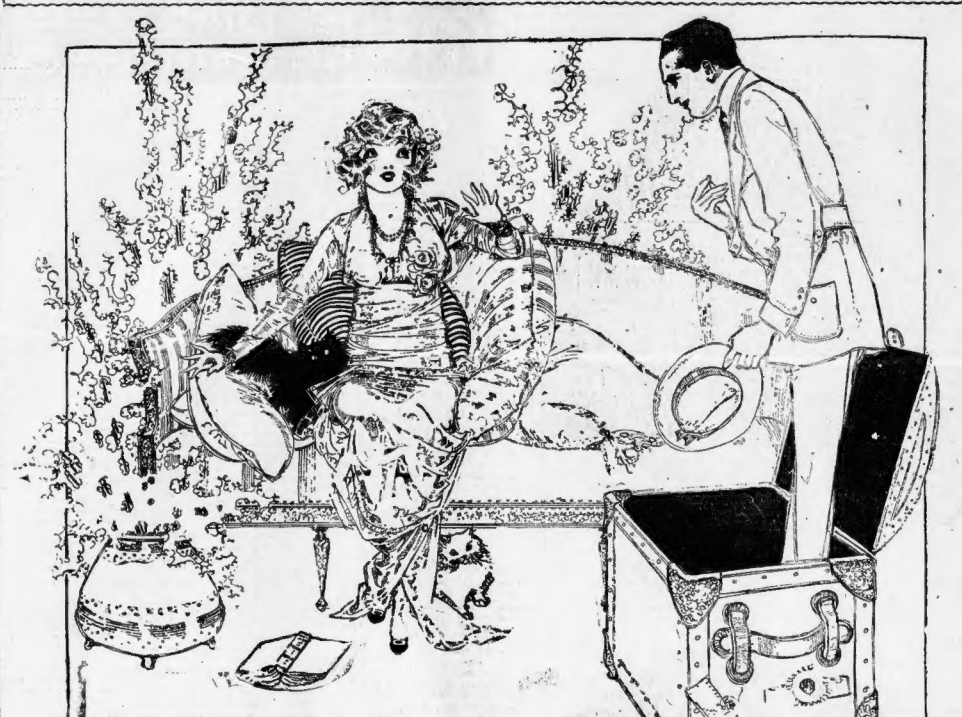
We had as well face the fact at last, that happiness in matrimony it to be found only in congeniality, and we like best, and get along most comfortably, with those who are born in the same things that we were, who have about the same amount of money, the same education, who are used to the same conventions, and who have the same tastes in literature and pie that we have.

The Only Way

That a Man and a Miss Can Properly Meet Without Being Introduced

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service



THE other day a young fellow knocked the ashes from his pipe—and soberly inspecting the toes of his new "hikers," said woefully to me; "Isn't it a pity, Mam'selle, that there isn't SOME way for the decent, well-bred sort of fellows and girls to know the stranger whose personality reaches out to them across the curb or the subway aisle? Oh, of course, that wouldn't be a puzzle for one sort; 'getting acquainted' is the best thing to do! I don't mean them. I mean REAL people, the clean chap who goes about his business with his eyes cool and straight ahead when it comes to girl-folks he doesn't know—the fine-bred girl who favors the stranger she admires with the same unmeaning glance she gives the church tower (unless he isn't looking!) That's the sort I mean. Don't you know, Mam'selle, that that variety of chap, in his travels around the city streets, sometimes holds the door open for a girl whom he would give his new bull-pup to know? Every detail about her appeals to the best he's got—calls to him—reaches out invisible hands and cries, 'what friends we'd be!' And he's got to accept her gracious, vanishing smile for his courtesy, straighten his back and FORGET IT! For, you see, he can't know her—if she was the kind he could—why then—why then"— the woeful young fellow finished lamely, "why then she wouldn't be the kind she is! Isn't it the same with girls? Doesn't a real girl look up in a crowded street into the eyes of a passing man and all of her capacity for comradeship or loving leap to him satisfied? And she goes on with her eyes cold—and he goes on not knowing—and they lose each other for all time! Gee—there ought to be a way out of that. I saw a girl in the gallery today—she had grey eyes and she carried herself like a slim birch tree—she liked the very pictures that I did. I watched her! She went out in front of my very eyes and dropped into Boston—out of sight. I'VE LOST HER. Couldn't you think of a way—a way to get to the stranger girl one likes?"

"Only one way," quoth I. "And this is it. Don't you remember how the lover in Arabian tales fell in love with the passing princess—doubled himself up in a carven trunk—had himself carried on the porter's black back to her house and the trunk banged down before her—flung back the lid and stood up with his hand on his heart and his turban in his hand? And watched the love dawn in her eyes? Billy boy—that's the only way! Get yourself carried in a trunk, to the lucky house that holds her, and set down at her feet. Then on the ardor of your own tongue depends your comradeship with her. You can't speak to her on the street—but you can pop up out of a trunk at her."

Billy boy looked at me darkly and scornfully. "Magic! I knew it took that. How do I know in this blamed town that's all littered up with so many people—where she even lives? I'd go in the trunk all right! But it's a magic trunk I need—one that would find its way by itself."

But that is the only way!

A swirl of sand caught up against a sky
Grown fiercely red like burning molten copper,

Cruel scarlet lips of smiling evil lure,
A scorching breath that speaks its demon purpose,
The spirit of the desert, swift and sure.

More Laughs From

THE MANICURE LADY

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"I GUESS I will have to be a suffragette after all," said the Manicure Lady. Ever since that Mrs. Pankhurst has came to our shores I have gave the matter a great deal of deep thought, and I have made up my mind that us girls has been overlooking a lot of bets."

"My wife is a suffragette," said the Head Barber, "and I never knew until she got in the game how many rights women have or ought to have. I always believed in going fifty-fifty with the Missus, and maybe I gave her even a few more rights than I took for myself, but now it's a good thing that I don't need many rights to get along on. To hear her talk, I guess the fair sex has got the unfair sex on the run."

"I wouldn't be stern with my husband if I was a married suffragette," declared the Manicure Lady; "but I would insist on a lot of the laws that we have got being changed. Goodness knows, some of our laws is a awful joke, and some of the lawyers that practice them ain't much better. One of them sued Wilfred yesterday for a tailor bill. He can't be much of a lawyer or he wouldn't have took the case, because suing my poor brother and getting anything out of it would be about as easy as digging a canal with one of those orange sticks. When Wilfred got the letter he said something in Latin like Sic Semper Tyrannis, which means you can't get no blood out of a turnip, or something like that.

ABOUT TIME

"But was I talking about the suffragette? Oh, yes. I have came to the conclusion, George, that it is time for the women of the country to rise up and desert themselves a little. As one of them suffragettes said at a meeting the other night, men has always refused to believe that women is their mental equals, which is dead wrong, the way I look at it. Honest to goodness, George, if I ain't the mental equal or even the mental superior of them slant-heads that comes in here to have their nails did I want to creak before another glorious sun has rose in the East."

"There has been more great men than great women," declared the Head Barber.

"That's what you read in a book somewhere," said the Manicure Lady. "How do you know that there hasn't been thousands of really great women in this world, if the men had gave them a chance to be great and celebrated? The few great women that did manage to get famous had a awful scramble getting listened to, and goodness knows, they got a raw deal even after they was famous. Didn't Miss Jones, of Arkansas, get burned at the stake after she had captured New Orleans, and didn't the Romans get after Cleopatra till she had to wait for a rainy day and commit suicide? Don't tell me, George, that women has ever got an even break. Well, they are going to get it before many more years, and some of these days we will have a governess instead of a governor, and she won't be impeached, either!"

NO KICK

"Oh, well, you don't need to go up in the air over it," said the Head Barber. "I ain't got no kick against women voting, if they register right and tell their ages as their conscience dictates. I ain't one of the men that believes in men bogging all the glory and money. I ain't got enough of either to put on exhibition under a microscope. Go on and be a suffragette if you want to, and I will like you just as much."

"Thank you, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I knew you was a broad man the minute I first seen you."

Up-to-Date Jokes

"Mabel," said he suddenly, "do you know what love is?"

"I think so," she replied simply.

"I mean, were you ever the object of a love that was as fierce as the onslaught of a tiger and as unquenchable as the stars? Were you ever truly loved?"

"Was I ever truly loved?" she repeated thoughtfully, "George, come back to the house and I will show you two diamond rings, a pack of valentines and a trunk full of photographs."

And George was silent.

* * *

"Have you any ideas for a comic opera?"

"Not one."

"You're just the man I'm looking for. I haven't any either, and together we ought to be able to write a winner."

Hope For Bald Heads

Well-Known Politician Nearly Bald Now Has Heavy Growth of Hair.

Tells How He Did It.

A Western politician, well known on account of his baldness, and his ready wit, surprised his friends by appearing with a heavy growth of hair; many of his friends did not know him, and others thought he had a wig. On being asked how he did it, he made the following statement: "I attribute the growth of my hair to the following simple recipe, which any lady or gentleman can mix at home. To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¾ oz. of Glycerine. Apply to the scalp two or three times a week with the finger tips. It not only promotes the growth of the hair, but removes dandruff, scalp humors and prevents the hair from falling out. It darkens streaked, faded, gray hair and makes the hair soft and glossy. These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost and mixed at home." Adv.

Their Married Life

Helen Finds Mrs. Merwin Prostrated by Being Asked to Leave the Hotel

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE messenger boy handed Helen the letter and poised with a grimy finger to the line where she was to sign for it.

Wonderingly she tore open the envelope. There were only a few lines—hurriedly penciled.

"Will you come to the hotel? I would not ask you—but am in great trouble. I know no one else to turn to. Something happened last night that makes everything impossible. They have asked for our rooms—oh, I can't write about it! Won't you come now—as soon as you get this! I am almost desperate! You will see no one—am all alone."

Helen read the note again and again, her tremulous fingers twisting and untwisting the envelope. What should she do? She shrank from the thought of going, yet how could she ignore this appeal.

Then, ashamed of her hesitancy, she dressed quickly for the street, and in half an hour she was at the hotel.

Did she imagine it, or did the clerk look at her oddly when she asked him to announce her to Mrs. Merwin? She felt his glance follow her as she crossed the lobby to the elevator.

There was a faint "come in" to Helen's knock, and she opened the door to a darkened room. The blinds were drawn and the air was close and heavy with perfume.

Mrs. Merwin was in bed, her long disheveled hair streaming over the pillow, and her eyes red with weeping.

"Oh, I'm so glad you came—I was afraid you wouldn't!" as Helen sat down on the edge of the bed.

"Why, what is the matter, dearie?" Helen had drawn off her gloves and was pushing back her tangled hair. "And it's so warm and close in here—don't you want me to open the window?"

Helen bowed one from the top without raising the blind. As she came back to the bed Mrs. Merwin drew from under the pillow a crumpled letter.

"Read that!" quiveringly. "They sent it up this morning."

It was typewritten, and signed by the manager of the hotel.

"Dear Madam:

"We regret the disturbance made by your husband last night in his intoxicated condition, we have no choice but to ask you for your rooms. The enclosed bill for $268 must be settled, and the rooms vacated by Monday.

"We have for you personally the greatest sympathy, and regret that this is necessary. You will understand, however, that we must protect the reputation of our house and insure our guests against a repetition of such annoyances. I beg to remain,

"Very truly yours,

"J. L. REYNOLDS, Manager."

It was several moments before Helen spoke. The letter seemed to her so crushing, so overwhelming, she could think of nothing to say. Mrs. Merwin had buried her face in the pillows and was sobbing afresh.

"But why did they write to you?" faltered Helen. "Surely Mr. Merwin was the one——"

"Oh, they know he hasn't been sober for a week! He could hardly stagger out of here this morning. And he hasn't the money. He can't pay this bill! Oh, I know he can't!"

Helen, at a loss to know what to say, kept chafing the hand that clung to hers. What kind of a scene had Mr. Merwin made? It had been serious enough, added to their unpaid bill, to cause the manager to write this note.

THE SHAME

"Oh, the shame of it—the disgrace of it!" sobbed Mrs. Merwin. "To be asked to leave a hotel! I shall never want to see any one again!"

Helen started up to answer a knock at the door. It was the chambermaid wanting to know if she could "do the rooms" now.

"No—no, not yet. Mrs. Merwin isn't very well. She will call you when she wants you."

"That's the third time she's been here this morning," mouned Mrs. Merwin. "She's anxious to get in—to see what I'm doing! Oh, they all know it! The bell boys, the maids—they all know we've been asked to leave."

"No—no, I'm sure they don't! The manager would never let the help know such things."

But even as she said it Helen thought of how oddly the clerk had looked at her when she asked for Mrs. Merwin.

"Monday—they've given us till Monday," hysterically. "This is Thursday—four days! What if Frank can't raise the money? What will we do then? What will——"

She started and clutched Helen's hand as the phone rang.

"Say I'm sick—that I can't speak to anyone," she entreated, as Helen rose to answer it.

"Hello! ..... Yes. ..... Mrs. Merwin is ill and cannot be disturbed this morning. ..... Who? ..... Oh, just a moment!"

"It is Mr. Merwin," whispered Helen, her hand over the receiver. "He says he must speak to you."

"No—no, I don't want to speak to him—not after last night," excitedly.

"I think you'd better come."

Helen helped her out of bed, but even at the phone Mrs. Merwin still clung to her, holding her so close that she could not help but hear distinctly the man's voice at the other end of the wire.

"Don't worry, Agnes. I've got the money! I went to a Turkish bath to sober up and met Will Gordon. He let me have five hundred because of that time I helped him out. I'm coming right up now to pay the bill and we'll be out of that blamed hotel today."

"Oh, I'm so glad—I'm so glad!" she was sobbing with relief. "After you left they sent me a note—the most awful note, asking for their rooms. Oh, I never want to see any of them again, I only want to get away! How soon will you be here?"

"In half an hour. I stopped to phone, because I knew you were worrying. Now buck up, little woman, there's to be no more booze. I'm through! And I've got more good news. Will Gordon put me on to a new thing—a South American deal he's putting through. He's going to let me in on the ground floor, and we'll be on easy street in a few weeks."

When she hung up the receiver she flung back her long tangled hair with a joyous:

"He has the money! He's coming in half an hour! Now we can pay our bill and get away from here. Oh, I want to be ready by the time he comes!"

NO BREAKFAST

"But you haven't had any breakfast," protested Helen, noticing how weak and trembling she was. "You must eat something first.

Oh, no, no—I wouldn't order anything from this place! I couldn't eat it if I did. If you'll only help me pack. There're just these two trunks," throwing up the lid of a large wardrobe trunk.

"Then let me start to pack while you dress," said Helen soothingly. "Just tell me what you want put in first."

"Oh, throw them in any way—it doesn't matter! Nothing matters, if we can only get away from here."

As Helen packed the French gowns and hand-embroidered lingerie she could not help but wonder at the Merwin's extravagance. It was plain that when they had money they spent it.

His clothes were as expensive as hers. All his underwear and hosiery were of silk, and his shirts all custom made. Everything bore the mark of an exclusive haberdasher.

Helen was anxious to leave before he came. She was afraid it would be both awkward and embarrassing for him to find her there. For every man resents his wife making a confidante of another woman.

"Now, I'm sure everything will be all right," reassuringly. "And when Mr Merwin does get on his feet again—if you'd only persuade him to put something aside——"

"Oh, I know—I know we ought to save, but we never do," bitterly. "But it's never been so bad as this before. It may be a lesson. I can't believe that he'll ever subject me to such humiliation again."

"I'm sure he won't," comfortingly.

"How can I thank you for coming this morning?" as she followed Helen to the elevator. "I don't know what I should have done alone. Just as soon as we're settled I'll let you know."

When Helen passed out through the lobby she saw Mr. Merwin standing at the desk with his wallet in his hand, evidently paying his bill. Tall, well-groomed, with an undeniable air of distinction, he did not look like a man who had just been asked to leave the hotel.

Would this humiliation be the salutary lesson he needed. Would he keep the promise he had just made his wife? Or would he go on, dragging her with him, to still further disgrace?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

YOU ARE RIGHT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am past seventeen and know a young man one year my senior who wants to marry. He is a news butcher and earns $8 a week. I would like to marry him, but I am pretty sure we could not live on that.

MAY.

IT would be difficult to live on twice $8 a week, and suicidal to attempt it on less. Both of you are too young to talk of marriage seriously.

GIVE HER UP

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty-three and have taken a very fond liking for a girl of fifteen, and I feel that I am in love with her, and as I have very serious intentions and as all my friends ridicule me about her I am writing to you for advice, whether I should continue my courtship or not, because if you think it is not right to go with a girl of her age I shall discontinue doing so.

IN DESPAIR.

I AM glad your intentions are serious. This means that they will survive separation from her, and that is what I advise. A girl of fifteen is three years too young to hear a story of love.

PERHAPS NOT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am deeply in love with a young man two years my senior. I am seventeen. Will you please tell me if I am too young to keep steady company with him. F. H.

SOME girls of seventeen are still babies and others are women grown. No doubt you are old enough to keep company with him so long as marriage is kept five or six years in the future.

DON'T RISK LOVE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young lady of eighteen years of age and have been keeping company with a young man two years my senior for about five months. Last night we had an argument, and he said that he would not come up this Saturday, as he had some business to attend to, but I know that he is also keeping company with other girls. He tells me he loves only me.

Do you think it would be right for me to keep company with other men without him knowing it? LOTTIE.

IF you know beyond doubt that he is dividing his attentions, this gives you a right to divide yours. But don't risk his love on hearsay evidence against him.

Household Hints

The uses to which eggs may be put are many, apart from their employment as food. A mustard plaster made with the white of an egg will not leave a blister. The white skin that lines the shell of an egg is a useful application for a boil. The white of an egg beaten with loaf sugar and lemon relieves hoarseness—a teaspoonful taken once every hour. An egg added to the morning cup of coffee makes an invigorating tonic. A raw egg with the yolk unbroken, taken in a glass of wine, is very beneficial for convalescents.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH LIVER

No headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out tonight and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret tonight straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken.

The Couples Who "Can't Get Along"

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

In the place where I am employed I have had several misunderstandings with a young lady, and though we do not speak to each other, we simply cannot get along.

Would you advise me to give up my position? X. Y. Z.

OH, fudge—diddlesticks—stuff and nonsense—that's all there is to that!

You simply can't get along! Well, now, how hard have you tried to "get along?"

What do you call getting along, anyhow? Agreeing as to every single pencil and pen in somebody's box?

What if she does want a stub pen when you want a pointed one? What if she wants the window up when you want it down? Put on your jacket and be pleasant about it, and first thing you know she'll lower the window—just a little; you see if she doesn't.

Give up your position just because you can't get along with this other foolish girl?

What are you doing with the money you make at that position? Keeping a roof over your head? Buying three meals a day and some fairly decent clothes?

DO A LITTLE WEIGHING

Holding and keeping your self-respect and your honest independence? Do a little weighing, dear girl, do a little weighing. Put your foolish little squabbles with the foolish little girl into the scales on one side and all that that job that you're so ready to give up means to you on the other and see which weighs the most.

When you've decided, stay decided once for all.

You'll never find any place or work in the world where there isn't something or somebody that you wish was somewhere else.

The girl at the desk next you may be all right, but there's sure to be one in the room somewhere who makes you cross every time you see the way she does her hair.

Some one will be too friendly—always looking over your shoulder to see what you are doing and how you are doing it—wanting to know where you live and who is going to take you to dinner, and how much you paid for the ribbon on your hat and whether it's all silk or just maybe—and some one will be too distant, making you feel as if you presumed if you forget and say good morning like a human being instead of like a nickel-in-the-slot phonograph.

Some girls will giggle every time they speak, and some wouldn't laugh if the funniest thing on earth happened right there in the office. What is all this to you?

Do you get a salary to regulate the world and the people in it?

THINK OF YOUR WORK

Mind your own affairs; think about your work; make it your business to attend to your business.

What is it you do; keep accounts?

Well, keep those accounts better than anybody else on earth can keep them—or try your best to do it. That's what you're there for.

Forget all about the girl that makes it so unpleasant for you. When you're done that, she can't do a thing to you.

And whiner—be quite sure that you are always agreeable and reasonable and sensible yourself.

It will be a great help.

An Anniversary

A man may be rough looking and yet have a touch of sentiment about him.

A ragged, ill-kept-looking man appeared at the door of a woman's home and, in a pleading tone, asked:

"Have you a piece of cake, lady, to give a poor man who hasn't had a bite for two days?"

"Can!" echoed the woman in surprise. "Isn't bread good enough for you?"

"Ordinarily, yes, ma'am. But this is my birthday," explained the tramp.

Not Appetizing.

Doctor—For dinner you should take forty minutes.

Timid Patient—Would it be dangerous to add a bit of meat and some vegetables?

Next time you need Coffee think of "Seal Brand."

Beauty

Mlle. Dazie Tells How to Mould Beautiful Shoulders, and Points Out the Value of Poise

Mlle. Dazie

I HAVE seen "La Belle Dazie" and she is! Just as bewitchingly pretty is Mademoiselle Dazie in her own dainty apartment as when she twinkles her toes at you over the footlights. From her many charms, I singled out the wonderfully clear and well-proportioned line of her lovely profile, the beautiful curve of the white shoulders and the soft, luxuriant hair.

"Will you tell me a short cut to the acquisition of these three aiders and abettors of beauty, Mademoiselle Dazie?" I asked.

"I will be glad to tell you all I know about it—and I won't pretend that I think that is very little," said the honest star. "For we women of the stage have to make a study of how to be just as lovely and appealing to audiences as a hoarding of natural resources and a few additions thereto will make us.

ON FALSE HAIR

"About a profile—it is a good idea to own a hand-glass and to view one's self side-face once in a while, for the coiffure that looks well from the front may make you look like a caricature of a leap-frog game or a door-knob from the side! Don't wear false hair if you can avoid it; it will cause your own locks to depart in wrath, and it will in all probability spoil the shape of your head. THE NATURAL CONTOUR OF THE HEAD IS GENERALLY WELL WORTH SHOWING—why won't more feminine persons remember that? A good masseuse to rub in a good tonic, a good brush, with your own arms to apply it faithfully, often and long, and you'll have luxuriant locks to aid an up-tilted poise in giving you a good profile. For 'carry the head high,' is the first rule for a good profile.

"Oh, and brushing your hair is fine for your arms. Calisthenics and exercise will generally give you rounded contours where you want them. I am pretty slender, you know, and yet I have not scrawny arms or shoulders. JIU JITSU DID THAT. For two years I did a jiu jitsu dance with a man who weighed half again as much as I did, but I was really and truly able to throw him through my knowledge of the Japanese art, and from the beginning of that act I noticed how my shoulders were rounding out and developing. Jiu jitsu ought not to be an outworn fad in this country. It is well worth the consideration of any woman who wants to develop into symmetry and strength. That and deep breathing gave me a broad, healthy singer's diaphragm, too. Oh, yes, jiu jitsu, of thee I sing! It gives a woman confidence in her power to take care of herself, and it will aid the under-developed woman to put a curve where she wants it and the woman of over-luxuriant figure to take off a curve or two.

"I have two more little secrets that I will be glad to give you," went on the generous Dazie. "They are on the subjects of eyes and relaxation."

FOR THE EYES.

And very important subjects they are, so the interviewer's heart was duly rejoiced at what she was about to receive.

"For eyes, which need diluted as much or as little as you like and applied with a bit of absorbent cotton whenever the eyes are tired or dusty. That cleanses and relaxes them.

"But about real relaxation, I have a theory that I most earnestly practise. Whenever fatigue threatens, I lie down flat on my back with no pillow to break the natural line of the relaxed body. Really, I fairly 'flop.' And there I lie with bodily tension all gone, and mind absolutely blank, and in a state of restful 'suspended animation.' And I get up rested, happy and ready to go on with the day's work.

"I walk, in spite of the fact that most dancers think they get enough leg motion and exercise in the practise of their profession. But I don't believe one can have too much out-of-door life, and I believe in exercise, so I go out and get them both, and when I am tired, I just relax completely, as I have told you.

"I don't sleep late, either, because morning hours are best for accomplishing things."

And so delightful Dazie has accomplished so much in a short life—so much for beauty and for art and for a willingness to work and give more and more of grace and charm to the world—I conclude that her "Morning Hours" really have "accomplished things."

THE KING OF DIAMONDS

BY LOUIS TRACY

A THRILLING STORY OF A MODERN MONTE CRISTO

TODAY'S INSTALMENT.

Copyright, 1904, by Edward J. Clode.

HE would depend on two classes of contributories—fools, like Langdon and slow-witted criminals, like Mason. Being a really clever man, it would be strange if his own middle path were not kept clear of fetters.

In the mystery surrounding Philip Anson's influence over these two he scented interesting developments. Beginning with a young rake's attempt to ensnare a beautiful girl, he suddenly discovered a situation pregnant with the potentiality of gain to himself. It did not matter to him who paid him, whether Anson or Langdon. He would betray one or the other, or both impartially.

Mason he liked. The man's rugged strength of character, his sledge-hammer villainy, his dogged acceptance of the leadership of a more skilled rascal, appealed to him. Mason was a tool and a hard-hitting one. He would use him, safeguard him if he could, but use him anyhow.

In the seclusion of Grenier's small flat Langdon poured out his spleen.

Anson was the bane of his life. His stepfather was Anson's uncle, and the old idiot secretly found out certain facts concerning the life led by his stepson that caused a family rupture. His mother endeavored to patch matters with ill success, and the baronet was intent on finding his sister's son, and stoning to him for years of neglect by making him his heir.

Lady Louisa concealed nothing of this from her scapegrace son. She hoped to frighten him by the threatened loss of supplies. But neither fright nor hatred could bring him to leave London and settle down to a quiet life in Devonshire, when, perhaps, the elderly naturalist's fit of indignation might gradually wear itself out.

At this crisis came his discovery of Evelyn Atherley, and a mad desire to win her affections. He even dreamed of persuading her to marry him, and by this means succeed in rehabilitating himself with Sir Philip Morland.

The girl was well-born. Mrs. Atherley was Lord Vanstone's half-sister, and, although his lordship had ruined himself and his relations by his extravagance, the match was in every other respect suitable.

He was not content with the slow formula of seeking an acquaintance in the ordinary way. Accustomed to speedier conquests, he confided his wishes to Grenier, and resented the latter's condemnation of his suggestion of a mock accident, in which Langdon should figure as the gentlemanly rescuer, as a ready means of winning the girl's grateful regard.

The result was worse than failure. He was wild with himself, wild with Grenier, and reached a higher pitch of fury when Mason swiftly refused to say what grievance he harbored against Anson.

A MUDDLE

"A nice muddle I've made of everything," cried the disappointed youth, "and a precious lot of friends I've discovered. I tell you everything, place myself unreservedly in your power, and you only let me drift into a stupid blunder, but decline to share your confidence with me."

He rose to go, but Grenier firmly pushed him back into a chair.

"Don't be a bigger fool than you are, Jimmie, and leave those who will help you. I told you the cab adventure was a mistake. It might go wrong in twenty ways and right only in one. And you must admit that I never heard of Anson from you until tonight."

"I may be to blame," was the sulky admission, "but who is your friend Hunter, and why does he not be as outspoken as I?"

"There are reasons. Hunter was cleaned out in Africa on account of Anson's manipulation of a diamond mine. He wants to get even with him. That should be enough for you."

Mason smiled sourly at his leader's ready explanation, and Langdon saw only the venom on the man's face.

"He ought to have said so," he muttered. "I am in no mood to be denied the confidence of those who act with me in this matter. In any case, what can we do?"

Grenier procured a decanter of brandy and passed his cigarette case.

"We can accomplish nothing without money."

"Money! What avail is money against a millionaire?"

"None, directly. You would be swamped instantly. But we must know more about Anson. He has servants. They can be made to talk. He has susceptible cooks and housemaids in Park Lane, and whatever place he owns in the country. I am great with cooks and housemaids. There is a mystery, an unfathomable mystery, about his supply of diamonds. It must be probed——"

"No mystery at all," snarled Jocky Mason. "He found a meteor in a slum called Johnson's Mews. It was cram full of diamonds. I saw 'em."

"You saw them!"

His hearers allowed all other emotions to yield to the interest of this astounding statement.

"Yes, I don't say much, do you? You'll get no more out of me. I want none of your girls or property. I want Philip Anson's life, and I'll have it if I swing for it!"

"My dear Hunter, you are talking wildly. Have another drink?"

Grenier, cool as an icicle, saw unexpected vistas opening before him. He must be wary and collected. Here was the man who would pay, and the man who would dare all things.

Mason's truculent determination gave hope even to Langdon. He, too, gifted with a certain power of vicious reasoning, saw that this new ally might prove useful. But he was afraid of such bold utterances, and hoped to achieve his purposes without binding himself even tacitly to the commission of a crime, for Mason not only looked, but talked murder.

A WEB

"I think I had better go," he said, suddenly. "Your brandy is too strong for my head, Grenier. Call and see me in the morning."

The astute rogue whom he addressed raised no objection to his departure. He instantly embraced Langdon's attitude in his wider horizon.

"Yes," he agreed, "let us sleep on it. We will all be better able to discuss matters more clearly tomorrow."

Thenceforth the flat in Shaftesbury avenue became a spider's web into which the flies that buzzed around Philip's life were drawn one by one, squeezed dry of their store of information, and cast forth again unconscious of the plot being woven against their master.

Within a month, Grenier knew Anson's habits, his comings and goings, his bankers, his brokers, many of his investments, the names of his chief employes, the members of his yacht's crew, the topography of his Surrey estate. Nothing was too trivial, no detail too unimportant, to escape a note undecipherable to others and a niche in a retentive memory.

He made a friend of one of Philip's footmen by standing treat and listening reverently to his views on the next day's racing. He persuaded one kitchen maid to Park Lane and another at Fairfax Hall that he had waited all his life to discover a woman he could love devotedly. It was a most important discovery when he unearthed in a dingy hotel the man whom Philip had dismissed for tampering with the locked portmanteau. From this worthy he first heard of the quaint adjunct to the belongings of the young millionaire, and judicious inquiry soon revealed that there was hardly a servant in Philip's employ who did not credit the Gladstone bag with being the repository of the millionaire's fortunes.

Ordinary people will credit any nonsense where diamonds are concerned. Even an educated criminal like Victor Grenier believed there might be some foundation for the absurd theory which found ready credence among the domestics.

He never made the error of planning a burglary or adroit robbery whereby the bag might come into his possession. If it did contain diamonds, and especially if it contained unique specimens, it was absolutely useless to him. But his vitals yearned for Anson's gold, and the question he asked himself in every unoccupied moment was how he might succeed in getting some portion of it into his own pocket.

One day a quaint notion entered his mind, and the more he thought of it the more it dominated him. He was tall and well made, if slim in figure, and his face had never lost the plasticity given it by his stage experience.

His had only heard Philip's voice once, but his features and general appearance were now quite familiar to him, and he undertook a series of experiments with clothing and makeup to ascertain if he could personate Anson sufficiently well to deceive any one who was not an intimate acquaintance. Soon the idea became a mania, and the mania absorbed the man's intellect. To be Philip Anson for a day, a week. What would he not give for the power!

One evening, when Jocky Mason entered Grenier's apartments, he started back with an oath as a stranger approached him in the dim light and said:

"Well, Mason, and what do you want?"

The ex-burglar and man-slayer seemed to be so ready to commit murder that Grenier himself was alarmed.

"Hold hard, old chap," he said, in his natural voice. "I am only trying an experiment on you."

"What tomfoolery is this?" shouted the other, gazing at him with the suspicious side glance of a discomfited dog which has been startled by some person familiar to it in ordinary guise but masquerading in outre garments.

"A mere pleasantry, I assure you. Good heavens, man, how you must hate this fellow, Anson, if you are so ready to slay him at sight. From your own story, he only acted as ninety-nine people out of a hundred would have done in helping the cop."

"What I want to know is, why you are playing tricks on me. I won't stand it. I'm not built that way."

"Now, Mason, be reasonable. Can I ask anybody else if I resemble Philip Anson when made up to represent him?"

"Perhaps not, but you ought to be warned me. Besides, I am worried to day."

"What has happened now?"

"I went to report myself to Seaward police station. Who should I find there but Bradley, the chap we used call 'Sailor.' He is an inspector n and, of course, he knew me at once."

ALARMING NEWS

"He pretended to take an interest me, and tried to lead me to talk ab you."

"The devil he did!"

"Oh, I know their ways. They'll do anything to me as long as I k up regularly and keep a clean sh

"But what about me?"

"I said you had been a good frie there was no use in denying that we have been pretty often—and that we'd thought of emigrating."

"Good. We will."

"Not me. I have a score to s tle——"

"Patience, my worthy friend. Your score shall be settled in full. I cannot prevent it, even if I would. Do you think I have been idle, or that I spend Langdon's money on a wildgoose chase? Not me. Langdon has taken my advice at last. He has met the charmer with whom he is infatuated. She almost recognized him, but he pretended such complete ignorance of us, and even in London, that her suspicions were quieted."

"What good is that to us?"

"Little, but it gave him the opportunity to try and ingratiate himself further. I failed most completely, and why?"

"How do I know? He is an ass, anyway."

"Exactly. More than that, the young lady is in love with Philip Anson."

"I'm not."

GOV. FOSS ON HIS APPOINTMENTS

Fitness for Office Considered First, He Says in Statement Today.

Governor Eugene N. Foss, in his seventh special article written for the AMERICAN, today recites his appointments as Governor. He says:

By EUGENE N. FOSS.

Nine-tenths of the public business of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is managed by men and women appointed by the Governor.

I have appointed to important positions of trust in this State during the past three years more than 600 persons.

During this time the people themselves have directly elected the State Treasurer, Auditor, Attorney General and the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Practically all other positions created by law to carry on the work of the State government, and to administer the laws enacted by the Legislature, are filled either by the Governor or by officials appointed by him.

These positions which I have filled include many of great importance, such as the chief justiceship of our Supreme Judicial Court, a large proportion of the present membership of the Superior Court, and the managers and directors of those great public departments which we call "boards" and "commissions."

Direct the State's Work.

I have chosen and appointed the men and women who administer our public charities, our prison system, our reformatory system, our hospitals, State schools and public educational institutions; who supervise our railroads, gas and electric light companies, banks and insurance companies; the Directors of the Port of Boston and the commissioners of highways, rivers and harbors, public reservations, water and sewage systems. I have appointed the men who administer the laws relative to medical and dental registration and examination; the boards of pharmacy, insanity, health.

I have named those who direct our State agricultural work, our forestry, fish and game expenditures and projects.

I have appointed also those who administer the labor laws and the Industrial accident or "workingmen's compensation" laws. The Police Department and the Military Department of the Commonwealth are under my personal direction and administered in large part by men whom I have appointed, so are the Police Department and the Licensing Board of the City of Boston. In short the Governor is the responsible head of practically all the public business of the Commonwealth and a part of the public business of the City of Boston.

Justice, punishment, charity, education, public health and public welfare are all in the hands of men and women chosen personally by me.

Select Only the Worthy.

The Commonwealth demands of her chief executive that he shall put into public office only those who are fitted in every way for public service. And, to supplement his efforts, the State provides a civil service law also administered by the Governor's appointees which fixes the choice of subordinate officers and clerks on a basis of personal character and fitness.

I confess to an honest pride in the conspicuous fitness and the high personal character of the men and women whom I have drafted for public duty in this State. And I have a still greater pride in the success with which I have made these appointments representative of all the people; and not representative of any class or faction to the exclusion of any other.

We have today a government of all the people, by appointive officers representing all the people.

In naming a judge, a police commissioner, or a manager of any of our great public undertakings, I have made the personal fitness of that man the one determining factor, irrespective of any traditional bias, preference or discrimination.

The Governor of all the people has no right to favor one party, one color, one race to the disadvantage of any other. And I claim to have set a standard of democracy and of equality before the law never before reached in this State, and nearly if at all in any other State.

Better Republicanism.

I claim that this policy which I have established in the public affairs of Massachusetts is a higher democracy than the partisan bias of the machine Democrat; a democracy more valuable to that party than could ever be attained by mere political subserviency.

I claim that my method is better Republicanism than the tactics of that Republican machine which had ruled Massachusetts for a generation when I assumed office.

And I claim that my policy is the only true progressive policy, for it has already established Massachusetts at the most progressive State in the Union.

This policy, which I have founded and pursued in spite of all fractional or partisan abuse and opposition, is the one highest gift that I am able to make to the political life of Massachusetts.

But, more than that, it is the greatest gift within my power to the business enterprise, the welfare and prosperity of Massachusetts.

It is the greatest possible gift to industry and to labor.

We have now a government—a public policy—in which labor is recognized on its just merits; its rights respected; a policy in which the business man also believes and which he indorses.

Only Test is Fitness.

The proof of these statements is clearly seen in the long record of my appointments themselves; and I am glad of the opportunity to publish in the AMERICAN a partial list of those whom I have either called to public service or promoted to higher places of public trust. This list is far from complete. The entire record is far too long to print.

But the representative names which I will give show conclusively the policy of Massachusetts under my administration and record to every section of the Commonwealth and its people a proper recognition, and to make individual fitness and character the one test in public appointment.

The appointments of Governor Foss made by the Governor's Council:

Justice, Supreme Court, Arthur P. Rugg of Worcester, Justice, Land Court, Edgar J. Lawrence.

Superior Court and other judicial appointments: George F. Hoar of Salem, John D. Kilduff of Boston, John B. Ratigan of Worcester, Patrick H. Keating of Boston, Fred L. Greene of Boston, Nathan P. Mitchel Is Still 3 to 1 Favorite

One Offer of $5,000 That Fusion Man Will Have 50,000 Lead.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Election betting in Wall Street has quickened considerably. On the Broad street curb and in Fred Schumm's on Stone street upward of $25,000 changed hands on the result of the Mayoralty contest.

The Fusion candidate is still a strong 3 to 1 favorite, but Tammany followers, for the first time this week, showed a disposition to back their choice at the quoted odds. Plenty of Mitchel money was in sight, but its holders would not give better than 3 to 1. The largest single wager reported was one of $5,000 to $1,000 on Mitchel.

Schumm is still offering $5,000 even money that Mitchel will get 50,000 plurality in Greater New York.

Don't Waste an Opportunity

To Get Your Share of the

$4,000 in Cash Prizes

Offered in the American's

New Picture Puzzle Contest

Here is the Plan of the Contest

Each day for 85 days (commencing Sunday, Sept. 21) the Boston AMERICAN will print a picture representing authors and their books, poets, plays, proverbs, battles, universities, inventions, actors, theatres, buildings and public men and women. $4,000 in cash prizes will be awarded to the 155 competitors who submit the largest number of correct answers according to the rules of the contest which appear each week in the Sunday AMERICAN.

Glance down the prize list and get busy right now—today, for the big $1,000 cash prize.

1st Prize	$1000.00	Cash
2nd Prize	800.00	Cash
3rd Prize	500.00	Cash
4th Prize	250.00	Cash
5th Prize	150.00	Cash
6th Prize	125.00	Cash
7th Prize	100.00	Cash
8th Prize	75.00	Cash
9th Prize	50.00	Cash
10th Prize	25.00	Cash
11th- 50th Prizes	10.00	CASH TO EACH
51st-155th Prizes	5.00	EACH

Lack of familiarity with the subjects need bar no one from competing, because there will be printed each week in the Sunday AMERICAN an official list of correct answers to the pictures to be used during the week commencing with this Sunday list publication.

That's all there is to it—there is no book to buy, or other expense of any kind necessary.

Through an error, the question under picture No. 40, which appeared in Thursday's American, Oct. 30th, was incorrectly printed, "What POET does this picture represent?" That is wrong. The question under picture No. 40 should have read, "WHAT BOOK DOES THIS PICTURE REPRESENT?"

To avoid confusion, picture No. 40 appears CORRECTLY herewith.

State's Problem Is the Railroad, Says Gov. Foss

"The railroad problem is of tremendous importance. I call upon every good citizen of this Commonwealth to help me to give Massachusetts one term of an Independent Governor and Independent Legislature, devoted to no other interest than the welfare of the people.

"The railroad problem, although essentially a public question, is no longer a political matter in a partisan sense. It formerly was, but I have taught even politicians the danger of regarding it as such."

LATEST FROM TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

When the New York market closed stocks ranged higher, but there was irregularity in Boston at the end of the week. At the close here United Fruit was off a point, as was Boston & Maine. New Haven and American Telephone were unchanged. There were small gains for Butte & Superior and United States Smelting, while North Butte and Old Dominion were a little lower. United Shoe was a point higher and American Woolen preferred was off ⅝.

Losses sustained in New York included American Can ¼, Canadian Pacific ⅛, Mexican Petroleum ½, and Lehigh Valley ⅝. Advances included Steel ⅛, Utah Copper ⅜, Reading ¼, Amalgamated ⅛, Pacific Mail ⅛, Erie ⅛, Southern Pacific ⅜, American Smelting ⅛ and St. Paul ⅛.

Trading was very dull in all markets. The weekly statement of averages of the New York associated banks and trust companies shows: Actual cash reserves, $6,850,800, decreased $6,265,650; loans increased $15,226,000; specie decreased $1,948,000; legal tenders increased $1,000,000; deposits increased $9,908,000; circulation increased $65,000.

New York Opened Steady.

The tone of the New York market was steady at the start despite confusion over interest disbursement due today in connection with an income tax provision. Trading was in fairly good dimensions, advancing ¾ to 100%, and small fractional gains were made in Union Pacific and Amalgamated. Canadian Pacific opened ⅛ lower, but quickly recovered most of this loss. Reading was conspicuous for Steel, but at the end of the first fifteen minutes Steel stock was above 59 and easy. Mexican Petroleum continued to show lack of support, declining three points on a few sales to 54, making a loss of ten points in the last two days.

Trading was dull in London and that market was closed.

New Income Tax Statement.

The Treasury Department has issued another set of rulings which will apply to the portion of individuals in regard to withholding the normal tax of 1 per cent, "at the source." It is pointed out that the personal exemption of $3,000 a single man or woman for 1913 will be $2,500 and a man and wife living together $4,333.33, instead of $5,000 and $4,000 respectively, because of a provision in the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill making income taxable from March 1 to December 31, 1913.

Those liable under the supplementary regulations for withholding the normal tax of 1 per cent. at the source include all persons, firms, organizations, etc., having the receipt, custody, disposal or payment of any annual income, profits or gains except as otherwise exempted by law.

The normal tax, it is explained, is not to be withheld until such time as the amount of such payment exceed $3,000. Then the tax is required to be withheld on the amounts of the total payments, unless claim of exemption is filed with the withholding agents. The withholding agent is not required to withhold the normal tax of 1 per cent. until on or after November 1, and then only on payments occurring on and after November 1, 1913, when in excess of the stated exemptions.

Stand by the Preferential.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has been told by Chairman Simmons and Senators Stone and Hoke Smith of the Senate Finance Committee that it will be difficult to get Congress to repeal the tariff bill clause granting a 5 per cent. preferential discount on goods brought to this country in American ships. Leader Underwood of the House and many of his prominent members will, it is understood, fight to retain the clause. Attorney-General McReynolds has reported to the Treasury Department, it is believed, that the discount cannot be allowed unless the concession is made to other nations having treaty rights which it is claimed are infringed upon by the clause. This ruling has not been made public.

"With this condition confronting the government," says a Washington dispatch, "it looks as if the clause should not be allowed to become operative, for its enforcement practically would mean a reduction of tariff duties by 5 per cent. all along the line. Such a reduction would decrease the estimated revenue from the new tariff by millions of dollars and upset the expected surplus from all revenues for the next fiscal year.

"Two courses, it was pointed out, are open to President Wilson, if he desires, to prevent enforcement of the preferential clause. He can continue to suspend its operation—a move made by the Treasury Department several weeks ago—or he can ask legislation in Congress to change the law.

"Continued suspension sooner or later would send the matter to the courts for a final interpretation. This course, many officials believe, is the one most likely to be pursued."

Financial News in Brief.

Financial institutions in this country will distribute today about $150,000,000 in interest and dividend disbursements, and in bond redeeming. The calling of call loans yesterday was in preparation for the payments.

The decline in Illinois Central yesterday was attributed to a rumor that the dividend rate of the road is to be cut further.

It is estimated, says the New York Sun, that shipments of the Steel Corporation in the second quarter of this year approximated 4,000 tons daily, against 40,500 tons in the third quarter. Shipments in the fourth quarter will be materially smaller than in the second or third quarter. The decrease in shipments during the third quarter amounted to 370,000 tons, compared with the preceding quarter, which was in the main responsible for a decrease in earnings of $4,950,000.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana yesterday declared the regular quarterly dividend of 8 per cent. and an extra of 9 per cent. The extra payment is 8 per cent. greater than paid three months ago. This company a short time ago declared a 2,000 per cent. stock dividend, increasing its capital stock from $1,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Sir George Paish, the eminent English economist, predicted when he arrived in this country yesterday business contraction in the world's trade because of the scarcity of money. Since the Balkan war, he says, it has been almost impossible to get new capital for new works.

The Fort Dodge, Des Moines & Southern Railway has been placed in the hands of a receivership sale to Hollis B. Fisher, representing the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston, for $3,500,000. Steps are taken to mean that the bondholders will retain control of the road.

Mrs. Harriman's Effort to Develop and Encourage American Workers

It Sets a Good Example to MEN with Money. Better Develop ONE American of Ability Than Enrich the Foreign Art Dealers. Free Trade Enthusiasts, Please Notice.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

E. H. Harriman left one of the biggest fortunes and one of the shortest wills on record.

He had collected in his lifetime, through his extraordinary genius for organization and constructive work, a great network of railroads. He was on the way to be the most powerful man in the country when death ended his labors.

Everything that he had, his entire fortune, his railroads—EVERYTHING he left to his wife.

It should interest Americans, especially those who make a specialty of spending their money abroad, and who believe that buying old stuff proves good taste, to learn one particular thing about the widow to whom Mr. Harriman left his fortune and his affairs.

ALL OF THE MONEY THAT SHE SPENDS IS SPENT IN AMERICA TO ENCOURAGE AMERICAN WORK AND DEVELOP AMERICAN RESOURCES.

Harriman gathered together a good many tens of millions of American money in his short life. His widow is spending the money WHERE HE MADE IT.

When Mrs. Harriman wants art work done she hires an American artist.

When she builds a house, she doesn't tear down fireplaces in Europe, or pull the locks and bolts off the doors of old convents, or bribe somebody to sell the inside of a church.

She instructs American architects to find American workmen, American artists, sculptors and others, capable of doing the work that she wants done.

Mrs. Harriman probably knows that this is not by any means "an art age" in America. She is well aware that nobody living either in this country or abroad can do the work that was done in the days of Francis the First.

But she knows also that the work of such men as Michael Angelo, Benvenuto, Leonardo and others would never have been done had not those who possessed money combined with that money sufficient patriotism to encourage the workers of their own land.

The idea that a thing must be OLD in order to be GOOD is not a new or an American idea.

When Michael Angelo was young he chiseled out a piece of sculpture, imitating the ancient Greek style, buried it in the ground and let it get reasonably aged and changed in appearance.

Then he sent it to a rich Cardinal in Rome fond of antiques.

The Cardinal was delighted and wanted to know where Michael Angelo had done his digging. The artist replied that he could dig up as many of those statues as the Cardinal desired—as he was able to make them in any quantity and better things more modern.

Fortunately the Cardinal was good-natured, and could see real merit, and he helped the young artist.

When the Pope wanted his own statue made, and the great church of St. Peter built, he did not hire some one to imitate the Greek style of sculpture or copy a Greek temple.

He let Michael Angelo make the statue, build the great dome, and do the wonderful painting in the Sistine Chapel. The paintings in that chapel are worth all the other paintings in the world.

That was the culmination of the genius of a great nation. Italy's greatness in that age was due to the fact that those who preceded Michael Angelo and his day were willing to encourage their own countrymen.

(It may interest you to know that the older Medici, whose son did so much for his country's art, was almost the exact image of our John D. Rockefeller.)

It isn't likely that Mrs. Harriman will live to see any great outburst of genius in American art. But at least she will have the satisfaction of doing what she can to help the country in which she and her husband were born, to encourage the ability of that country, be it great or little. And she will also have the satisfaction of knowing that the seed of encouragement sown today will bear fruit in the future. Men who think women their inferiors please take notice.

P. S.—We call Mrs. Harriman's method to the attention of free trade enthusiasts who are doing their best to give people outside of America a chance to do work that Americans ought to do.

What Mrs. Harriman has done voluntarily and intelligently, using her influence and power to build up American art and American mechanics, our tariff has done to a large extent automatically—and that fact should not be forgotten.

Originally England could make steel much better and cheaper than America. But the tariff helped our steel men, and now we have beaten the English.

Originally we did not make plate glass in this country or any one of a thousand other necessary things. But the tariff made it worth while for manufacturers to start here and teach Americans how to do the work.

It was rather hard for our farmers to clear away our forests, keep back the Indians and keep off the mortgage owner at the same time. But the tariff on farm products encouraged the American worker and our various "billion-dollar crops" are the result.

The enthusiastic gentlemen at Washington who are doing what they can under Mr. Wilson's guidance to give foreigners a chance to get the American market and do the work for Americans that Americans have hitherto been doing for each other might learn something if they sent a commission to talk to Mrs. Harriman about the importance of SPENDING YOUR MONEY WHERE IT IS EARNED and keeping it in the family.

Uncle Trusty

"Ah, Johnny, these are lively times! I notice that Theodore is going to cross the Andes in an automobile! He thinks if he keeps on doing stunts and gets lots of space in the papers for the next three years he can get the Republican nomination! No stunts, no space! No space, no nomination! Har, har! And there's Woodrow, too, handing out a slick line of talk on the Mexican situation! I wonder how Woodrow would feel if he woke up some morning and found that he really had to DO something! I've got a great ostrich farm here! This breed of ostriches is small, but their feathers are fine! They don't need much food, and they're very amusing! When they stick their heads in that sand bank they think I can't find them and pull their feathers out! Haw! That greased pole of yours is a scream, Johnny! Every time that fellow tries to climb it he falls down and it jolts the money out of his pocket and you get it! As Aristotle used to say to his pupils, 'When you see a bonehead, trim him!'"

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER I.

WHEN James Marvin's wife died she bequeathed the little money she could call her own to her two daughters, Julia and Caryl. It was only four hundred dollars, yet her husband was conscious of a slight resentment that in disposing of what was left of the sum she had had when she married him she should have thought of her daughters rather than of him.

The fact that he had had the use of several thousands which had come to her from her father's estate, and that she had never asked him to account to her for a cent of it, did not prevent his feeling that his wife had dealt rather unfairly with him when planning for the disposition of her small funds.

Still, he had set these thoughts aside, and before filling the blank left in the home by his wife's death he counselled his two girls to put away in the savings bank their four hundred dollars.

"The cash will come in comfortably later on," he said to them. "Let it lie and gather interest until you are ready to get married. Then there will be enough of it for you to pay for your own wedding clothes and for your own weddings."

The two girls had followed their frugal father's advice—Julia, the elder, willingly; sixteen-year-old fair-haired Caryl with some rebellion and many protests concerning the number of "perfectly lovely things" she could buy with her share of the money if she were allowed. Although she had little stability of purpose and an imagination that sometimes got the better of her sense of proportion, she had been her mother's favorite, and during this parent's lifetime had been petted and indulged as the none too happy wife does pet and indulge the child whom she loves better than all the world beside.

It is not always the boy or girl most worthy of such love who receives it.

Julia, Caryl's senior by three years, was entering upon her last year of high school. Caryl was still in the final grade of grammar school, from which position she had already seen one class graduate and leave her behind. It was not that she was not clever enough to keep pace with the other scholars had she applied herself sufficiently to do so. "My teacher doesn't understand me," she would say plaintively when she carried home an especially poor report.

Her mother, ever ready to stand between her child and the father's displeasure, would smooth the matter over while in her husband's presence, and comfort Caryl when alone with her. Yet, in spite of this daughter's seeming dependence upon her mother, Mrs. Marvin's death produced upon her younger child only a transitory grief. Her facile nature shed sorrow easily, and in less than a fortnight after the funeral she was singing about the house and admiring the contrast of her black dress and clear complexion before the long mirror in the parlor.

Mrs. Marvin had died in early September. On the first day of the New Year James Marvin married again. His second wife was as strong and inflexible of will as he was weak and unstable. Even before his remarriage his daughters had formed a dislike for the woman who was destined to take the place that had been their mother's.

Their father brought their stepmother directly home from the parsonage where the pair had been made one—and a new regimen set in. The self-seeking New England woman made no effort to alter Julia's and Caryl's sentiments toward her.

For a time their father tried feebly and fitfully to keep things smooth between the warring elements in his household. Then he gave up the effort and threw his weak influence on the side of his domineering wife. It was more uncomfortable to incur her displeasure than to go counter to his daughters' whims and desires, and he took the line of the least resistance.

The two girls drew closer together in the months that followed upon their father's second matrimonial venture and supported each other vehemently in the open disputes and altercations that came to be a part of their daily life. The breach widened and deepened day by day and the climax was reached one morning early in April when the members of the household were gathered about the breakfast table. Marvin, ill at ease as was his present custom when in the company of his daughters, the two girls silent, and Mrs. Marvin hot and fuming from her preparation of the morning meal over the kitchen range.

The man was visibly more nervous than usual and after a prolonged silence he cleared his throat, glanced uneasily at his stern-faced wife and spoke.

"Girls, I don't like it that your mother should——" he began, then paused. For Caryl had made a wry face at his use of the title "mother." He saw it, flushed, hesitated, and, with an effort, spoke more firmly.

"Remember that you're at my table, girls!" he reprimanded. "What I want to say is that I'm not going to have your mother doing all the work of this house while you two fritter away your time in school. And what I say, I mean."

Julia had been sitting silent, her eyes downcast, apparently absorbed in her own meditations. She had acquired self-control during months of unhappiness; but she looked at her father now with an expression of surprise mingled with disappointment.

"You mean that you are not willing to have me remain at school and graduate?" she asked slowly.

The man moved uneasily in his chair, met his wife's stern gaze and cleared his throat again.

"Yes, that's it," he acknowledged awkwardly. "I've been talking the matter over with—your mother." There was defiance in the emphasis he placed on this last word. The girl started to speak, but checked the impulse. "We have decided," the man went on, "that it's time that you and Caryl were helping her a little and doing something toward earning your own living."

Caryl spoke quickly. "Then I won't have to go to high school at all?" she asked. There was a note of hope or relief in her tone, and her sister, hearing it, looked at her reproachfully.

"Caryl," she protested, "it's bad enough for me to have to leave school before my graduation and before the education I expected to have is nearly completed. But as for you, you ought to stay long enough at least to——"

The stepmother interposed impatiently, hard lines about her lips. "There you go again!" she exclaimed. "You are just proving, Julia, the truth of what I said to your father last night and this morning about you and your high-falutin' notions. I have slaved for you girls all that I'm going to slave. If you don't like the way you're treated here, suppose you go somewhere else and try supporting yourself, and see how you like the change!"

The elder girl sprang to her feet, the dark color flooding her usually pale face.

"When my own mother was alive——" she began passionately, but her father interrupted her.

"Now, Julia," he worried nervously, "don't say anything you'll be sorry for! You're very unreasonable nowadays. You don't show any appreciation of what's being done for you all the time. It oughtn't to be a hardship to you and Caryl to take care of yourselves from now on. Lots of girls of the age of you two are earning their own living. If your mother and I felt that we could afford to keep you in school longer we might——"

"It's not a question of what we can afford!" the wife broke in sharply, her black eyes snapping. "I simply say that they've got to work as long as I remain in this house. I am mistress here, and I'll have you all remember that fact!"

"You needn't bother to remind us of it!" exclaimed Caryl, pushing her chair back from the table and starting for the door. "If I had my way I wouldn't stay another night under this roof! I hate you!"

With which parting outburst she fled sobbing from the room.

"You couldn't please me better than by getting from under this roof!" her stepmother called after her, her face crimson, her lips twitching.

Julia, as she heard the challenge, felt the hot tide of rage throbbing in her throat, and with an effort she steadied her voice.

"Father," she said, her forced calmness making her speak with unnatural deliberation, "since you and—your wife feel that you cannot support Caryl and me any longer, and since you would be glad to be rid of us, we will go away and relieve you of the burden of taking care of your own children. We shall be as glad to leave you as you will be to have us go."

Her father's resentment flared into the puny rage of a weak man. "Go, then, and good riddance to you both!" he burst forth shrilly. "I'm sick to death of your spats and fights day and night, but if you leave my house don't you come back on me for support! You won't get it, you ungrateful hussy!"

Pale to the lips, the girl turned and went upstairs.

An hour later James Marvin knocked at the door of his daughters' room and entered. Caryl stood at the mirror arranging a new hair-ribbon about her yellow curls. Julia sat on the bed. Her eyes were red, and in her left hand she held clenched a crumpled handkerchief, while in her right hand was a cheap little photograph which her father recognized. He prefaced his remarks with the customary clearing of his throat.

"Girls," he announced, "I was a little out of patience this morning, and I said some things that perhaps I oughtn't to have said. I've come up now to tell you that I'll be willing to have you stay on here with us if you'll do your share toward helping with the housework and with the family income. I can't have you go away and people saying that my daughters won't live with me."

He tried to smile, but failed. Julia looked at him so gravely and steadily that he shifted his feet uneasily, and his pale eyes wandered about the room, avoiding her stern gaze.

"There were some things said this morning," she answered in an even voice, "that neither Caryl nor I can forget. We will not put you to the bother of caring for us any longer. Since you evidently fear what the neighbors will say about you and your wife—since you are afraid to have them know the truth—I will tell you that we are going to Boston to work. You can say this to any inquirers, then there will be no opportunity for gossip."

"You're not treating me and your mother fairly," protested Marvin.

The girl's calm eyes fell to the photograph she held and rested there for a long time. When she raised them again to her father's face the expression in saw in them made him leave the room, slamming the door behind him.

FROM MAX H. NEWMAN CLUB

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—The members of the Max H. Newman Club, in meeting assembled at Intercolonial Hall, October 26, passed the following resolution, thanking the Boston AMERICAN for the stand it has taken in the matter of Mendel Beilis, and his trial in Russia, for ritual murder.

And be it resolved that we consider it a most nefarious charge and hope that Russia may be made to see the error of her way. Persecution and hatred should be wiped from the category of infamy.

SOLOMON WATERS, President.

FROM ONE WHO FEELS ENCOURAGED BY THE AMERICAN'S EFFORTS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I cannot help but make some comment on your splendid editorial regarding the Beilis trial, now going on in Russia. Such an editorial not only protests against the infamy and injustice suffered by the Jewish people in that dark and barbarous Russia, but also lays bare before the American people the methods employed by the Russian government in persecuting the unfortunate Jews, whose lives are gradually being crushed out in the paws of Nicholas, the Tyrant of Russia.

The Czar realizes that massacres and slaughters, without any cause, will no longer be endured by the civilized world. Innocent men, women and children can no longer be butchered without worldwide protest. But the bloodthirsty Nicholas will not have the Jews bring light to the Russian people till it will not have his subjects, whom he has kept for centuries in the dark, awakened by the Jews. Why? Because he is well aware of the fact that once the Russian people awaken from their deep slumber, once they become acquainted with history, the struggle for and triumph of republics, he, Nicholas, will fall, and will never again rise.

This thought is haunting him day and night. He sees in the Jew, not only his downfall, but also an ally in the cause of the bloody Romanoffs, who, for centuries, suppressed the growth and progress of the Russian people. He understands that the Jews, eventually, will by their constant fight for social, political and religious freedom, awaken the Russian people. To prevent this, Nicholas has to excite the feelings of his people, so that they will hate the Jews still more. This explains why Nicholas is accusing Beilis of a "Ritual Murder."

It is indeed encouraging for us to have at our disposal a paper that always takes the initiative in arousing the people against an injustice.

Yours truly,

MARK SHAIN.

FROM ONE WHO CAME FROM RUSSIA TWO YEARS AGO

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Allow me to express in your paper my sincere thanks for your splendid publicity in the protest in your paper about the disagreeable blood accusation of the Judaists, which is outrageously planned in the ignorant and dark country of Russia.

Being only about two years from that tyrannous land the scenes of barbarism, with their anti-Semitic newspapers, are still fresh for my eyes. My heart is therefore full of pleasure, knowing that I am already in such a free land, with such noble papers as the Boston AMERICAN, which is a true example of the land of light and freedom, which stands always on the side of the ungulty. Therefore I wish you many years to go along with your noble paper, which spreads justice and truth in the cause of humanity. I remain, your reader and patron,

HYMAN L. HARWAS.
